KAISER CHALLENGES GERMAN LIBERALISM

Storm of Criticism When He Says He Will Go His Own Way and Asserts Divine Right.

RETICENCE PLEDGE BROKEN

Occasion Was Speech at Koenigsberg, Where Kaiser Took Occasion Also to Rebuke Woman Suffrage.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Aug. 26.—It is declared here that the Kaiser by his speech at Koenigsberg yesterday, asserting once more his divine right to rule and declaring that he will "go his own way regardless of passing views and opinions," has thrown down the gauntlet to German liberalism in a fashion that will convulse the empire. Already the speech has aroused in the press the fiercest criticism and rebuke.

This is the first time the Kaiser has broken the reserve which he promised to maintain after the crisis in November, 1908, growing out of the publication of The London Daily Telegraph's interview. It is a coincidence that at Koenigsberg so long ago as 1894 his Majesty announced his belief that he represented monarchy by divine right. Last night at a banquet in the same town he declared again that he regarded himself as the "instrument of the Master," and quoted the words of his grandfather, who, he said, proclaimed that the Prussian crown "was bestowed upon him by God's grace alone and not by Parliaments, assemblages of people, or resolutions of people."

The reports of Thursday's speech did not reach here till 10 this morning, owing to the fact that, like all his Majesty's public utterances, it had to be revised either by the Kaiser himself or a member of his suite deputed for that purpose before it could be published. That the passage declaring the imperial intention to "go his own way" was passed for publication is taken to mean that the Kaiser's harangue is no impulsive expression of opinion, but a deliberate announcement and a premeditated challenge to parliamentary government.

FUEL FOR ANTI-MONARCHY FIRE

German Moderates' View of Kaiser's Divine Right Utterance.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Aug. 26.—The Berlin correspondent of The London Times says that the German press raises the question whether the Kaiser's Koenigsberg speech was composed with the knowledge of the Imperial Chancellor and, if so, what was the attitude of von Bethmann-Hollweg in the matter.

Moderate journals express regret, the correspondent says, that his Majesty should have exposed himself needlessly to the fire of public criticism, and that at a time when political feeling in Germany, and especially Prussia, is running high, he should have accentuated the contrast between the Divine "right of Kings" and the decisions of popular assemblies. It is felt by these journals that, although no one can look upon the Kaiser as anything but a constitutional monarch, his latest utterance can only serve as fuel to the fire of anti-monarchical agitation.

A Berlin dispatch to The Daily Mail says:

"The Kaiser's autocratic manifesto has acted as a bombshell in the German press. The newspapers find to their consternation that the imperial volcano was not extinct. Unanimous lamentation goes up from journals of all shades of opinion that the Kaiser has once more shattered the bonds of reticence which he laid upon himself two years ago."

In an editorial to-day upon the Kaiser's speech The Times says:

"History is not likely to regard it as an accident that the two figures whose eloquence reached furthest in the Western world of their day should have insisted in language so similar in its directness and force on the simple human obligations which men and women were seeking to escape. Emperor William and Col. Roosevelt do not preach from the same text, but the moral of their preaching is the same."

THE CHORUS OF CRITICISM.

The German Press and the Kaiser's Remarks that Gave the Text.

BERLIN, Aug. 26.—The speech delivered last night by the Kaiser at the provincial banquet at Koenigsberg, in which he reiterated and emphasized his belief in the divine mandate by which he rules, and spoke against the present movement for women's suffrage, is the political sensation of the hour. The most striking of the Kaiser's remarks was in connection with a mention of Emperor William I. "My grandfather," he said, "by his own right placed the Prussian crown upon his head and again proclaimed it to be bestowed upon him by God's grace alone and not by Parliaments, assemblages of the people, or resolutions of the people, and that he saw in himself the chosen instrument of heaven, and as such he regarded his duty as regent and ruler." Then in closing he declared: "Considering myself as the instrument of the Master, regardless of passing views and opinions, I go my way, which is solely devoted to the prosperity and peaceful development of our Fatherland."

The leading organs of the German press generally criticise the Kaiser's utterances, and there are indications that the discourse will have a deep political effect upon the country, nearly all the Berlin papers discussing the subject in connection with the political crisis of November, 1908, when the publication by The London Daily Telegraph of an interview with the Emperor aroused a storm against the uncontrolled public speaking of his Majesty.

NEW YORK COUNT DELAYED.

Census Returns Not to be Announced Until Next Week.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 26.—The census figures on the State of Michigan as a whole and by counties will be made public to-morrow. The computation has been made in advance in order to meet a legal demand of the State in connection with elections. While, as a rule, owing to the activity of manufactures, most of the important cities show a great increase, there will be a falling off in some of the counties where there is no manufacturing of consequence.

The figures on New York will not be available at as early a date as was expected. The Census Bureau had hoped to make its announcement regarding the National metropolis by to-morrow night, but owing to some technicality the statement will be deferred until next Tuesday or Wednesday.

The population of Saginaw, Mich., is 50,510, an increase of 8,165, or 19.3 per cent., as compared with 42,345 in 1900. Bay City has 45,166, an increase of 17,538, or 63.5 per cent. as compared with 27,628 in 1900. Lansing, Mich., has 31,229, an increase of 14,744, or 89.4 per cent., as compared with 16,485 in 1900.

TRIES TO KIDNAP HEIRESS.

Man Seizes Miss Shepherd, but Flees When Policeman Appears.

Special to The New York Times.

WILKESBARRE, Penn., Aug. 26.—Miss Ruth Shepherd of Scranton, heiress of the big Crawford estate worth several millions, and the daughter of James G. Shepherd of Scranton, President of the People's Coal Company, has returned from Martha's Vineyard, Mass., somewhat shaken after a daring effort to kidnap her, which might have succeeded but for the presence of mind of the Rev. Dr. Dorchester and his wife. Miss Shepherd has been carefully guarded since she became heiress to the Crawford estate, and an officer guards the Scranton residence every night when she is at home.

A short time ago she and Blanche Reynolds of Scranton went to visit Dr. and Mrs. Dorchester at Martha's Vineyard. The four were out walking a few days ago, the two girls being ahead, when a well-dressed heavily-built man stepped from the bushes along a lonely road and seized Miss Shepherd. The girl shrieked for help and Dr. Dorchester and his wife rushed up. The man was dragging Miss Shepherd down the road and refused to release her. He said he was a detective and that Miss Shepherd was a girl for whom he had been looking.

Dr. Dorchester said in that case they would all go to Martha's Vineyard and the mistake could be corrected. The man daringly started with them, holding Miss Shepherd by the arm, but fled when, close to the town, they perceived a police officer.

FIVE HAVE RARE DISEASE.

Whole Family Contract Gangrenous Ergotism from Infected Bread.

The Board of Health is investigating what is said to be the first case in the United States of gangrenous ergotism, a corrosive disease frequently found in Russia and the Orient, resulting from a parasitic fungus clinging to the kernel of unmatured wheat and rye, and eaten in bread. A family of five persons has been stricken by the disease in Harlem, and two are now at the J. Hood Wright Hospital. Amputation may be necessary to save their lives.

The disease first was noticed on Aug. 17, in Katherine and Jennie Florence, daughters of Joseph Florence, a tunnel worker, of 504 West 185th Street. It appeared in the form of black spots on Katherine's feet and left ear, and Jennie's right foot. The disease spread rapidly and on Aug. 19 they went to the dispensary. After three days' treatment there they were removed to the hospital.

On Aug. 20 the other three members of the family were attacked. Black spots appeared on a foot of Florence, on the index finger of his wife, and on both feet of their son, Joseph. All have been treated daily at the dispensary, but have not yet been removed from their homes.

While all are said to be doing well, and the disease seems to have been checked, the physicians would not say last night whether amputation would be resorted to. The disease is not contagious, but the Board of Health is investigating bakeries of the neighborhood to find the place from which the disease was contracted.

MORE TROOPS FOR COLUMBUS

Harmon Will Keep Fifth Cleveland Regiment There Till Strike Ends.

Special to The New York Times.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Aug. 26.—Gov. Harmon to-day relieved the First Regiment of Cincinnati, which has been on duty two weeks during the street railway strike, and summoned the Fifth Regiment of Cleveland to take its place. The Governor announced that he would keep the troops here until the company and the strikers come to terms. Rioting continues, but there has been few serious depredations since the recall of the troops.

Early to-night a car on the Westerville branch was blown up with dynamite. The car was almost completely wrecked. The crew, though thrown into the street, escaped without serious injury. The car was standing on a switch when the explosion occurred, having been sidetracked to let another car pass. Two men who were seen by the conductor and motorman prowling about the car just before the explosion occurred were arrested. A large stick of unexploded dynamite was found near after the explosion.

To-night Mrs. B. C. Eckstorm, wife of a Captain of the First Regiment, was struck on the head by a brick while riding in an open car and rendered unconscious. Her skull was laid bare, and she is thought to be fatally hurt.

RUSSIA ADMITS STRAUS.

American Ambassador to Turkey as a Jew Gets Special Permit.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Aug. 26.—A dispatch to The Tageblatt from St. Petersburg states that the Russian Ministry of the Interior has published an order giving Oscar S. Straus, the American Ambassador to Turkey, permission to visit St. Petersburg. The order is as follows:

> The Ministry of the Interior permits the American Ambassador to Constantinople, Oscar S. Straus, who belongs to the Jewish confession, to visit St. Petersburg with his family.

This order is regarded as a striking illustration of the rigor with which the anti-Jewish regulations are being enforced.

TRAIN HITS AN AUTO; 2 DEAD, 3 ARE HURT

Father and Daughter Killed at the Erie's Broadway Crossing in Paterson, N. J.

TROLLEY CAR JUST ESCAPES

Train They Let Go by Shut Out the View of One Eastbound—Son Escapes.

Special to The New York Times.

PATERSON, N. J., Aug. 26.—As the last car of a west-bound Erie Railroad train rattled over the trolley tracks at the Broadway crossing here at 7 o'clock to-night, Gateman Frederick A. Steward of 72 North Tenth Street raised the safety gates and a trolley car and an automobile started across the tracks. Hidden by the rushing west-bound train, a train bound into the Pavonia terminal, on the outskirts of Jersey City, was approaching the crossing at high speed.

The motorman of the trolley car and the driver of the automobile, each already on the tracks, saw the oncoming train at the same instant. The motorman reversed his power, jogged over a switch, and brought his car to a halt, derailed, but just beyond reach of the train. The motorist acted as quickly, but his car did not respond so fast. The train crashed into the tonneau, tossed the car a dozen feet away a mass of broken wood and twisted steel, and left dead beside the track two persons. Three children, sent tumbling head over heels for many feet, were injured. Only a boy escaped unhurt.

THE DEAD.

FROELICH, ALBERT, owner of the automobile.

FROELICH, HENRIETTA, his daughter, 22 years old.

THE INJURED.

BUTLER, HUGH, 12 years old, of Scranton, Penn.; scalp torn.

EDWARDS, NORTON, 13 years old, of 425 Van Houten Street, Paterson; injuries about the body.

FOYLE, CHESTER, 11 years old, of 438 Van Houten Street; internal injuries.

Albert Froelich, Jr., the twelve-year-old son of the motorist, escaped without any hurt. His comrades will recover, however.

The accident occurred at what is known as one of the most dangerous crossings in this city and at which not only a gateman, but a flagman as well, is kept constantly on duty, the latter especially to caution approaching trolleys, autos, wagons, and pedestrians. It came near the end of a short spin about the city streets on which Mr. Froelich had taken his daughter and small son and the latter's boy chums.

Mr. Froelich and his daughter had intended to start out alone, but Albert pleaded for a ride for himself and his friends, and the father turned back to take the youngster aboard. The car was headed toward home when the train hit it.

The shock of the collision with the locomotive tossed all the occupants of the automobile out of their seats. Mr. Froelich was thrown between two poles on the curb line and was killed instantly. His daughter was tossed against a telegraph pole, her head striking against it, and her skull being fractured. She lived long enough for men in the crowd that gathered to carry her into the office of Dr. A. H. Vanderbeck, in Broadway, next to the Hebrew Free School, onto the grounds of which some of the other occupants of the auto were thrown. She died within a few moments.

Three of the boys landed on the sloping lawn of the school grounds. Young Butler, however, alighted on the stone flagging of the sidewalk. He, with all the others, except young Froelich, who ran, screaming with fright and grief, all the way to his home, was carried also into Dr. Vanderbeck's office and treated there by Dr. Vanderbeck and Dr. F. S. Dorcy of Washington, D. C., who is in this city on a vacation.

Young Butler, whose head was injured badly, has been spending a vacation here with his grandfather, James Blauvelt of 436 Van Houten Street.

BABY DIES ON AUTO RIDE.

Mrs. W. S. Cutter Finds Infant Lifeless in Her Arms.

Special to The New York Times.

PORT WASHINGTON, L. I., Aug. 26.—Dorothy, the five-months-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Cutter, whose Summer home is at Little Neck, L. I., died in her mother's arms here last night while Mrs. Cutter, her husband, and some friends were enjoying an automobile ride. The young mother swooned.

Mr. Cutter is a nephew of the late Bloodgood H. Cutter, who was widely known as Long Island's "Farmer Poet," because of the quaint verses in which he expressed his views of current events.

Last evening the Cutters and friends decided to motor to the Port Washington Inn for dinner. Believing the air might do the baby good, for she had not been quite well for some time, Mrs. Cutter took her in her arms.

Just as the car stopped at the inn Mrs. Cutter saw blood on the infant's face and screamed, "The baby is dead."

Dr. W. I. Cocks said the child had died from cerebral hemorrhage.

Struck by Richard Stevens's Car.

Emil O. Kultz of 143 Springfield Avenue, Newark, was hit by an automobile at the Hudson Boulevard loop at Duer Place, Weehawken, yesterday afternoon. The driver threw on full power and disappeared down the boulevard. Several persons caught the number on the car, and it was quickly telephoned down the road and a few minutes later a touring car belonging to Richard Stevens of Castle Point, Hoboken, and driven by his chauffeur, Frank Trott, was halted by the police. Trott was held without bail. The injured man is in the North Hudson Hospital in a dangerous condition.

Insane Man Killed by Auto.

MONTCLAIR, N. J., Aug. 26.—Albert Barnett, 60 years old, an inmate of the Overbrook Insane Asylum, stepped in front of an automobile on the Pompton Turnpike, near Cedar Grove, last night. He died in the Mountainside Hospital an hour later. The car was in charge of Elmer B. Taylor, who was held for the Grand Jury. Besides Taylor the other occupants of the car included William Greenfield, Miss Helen Greenfield, and John Ingraham, all of New York. Barnett had been an inmate of the asylum for thirty years.

WOMAN BEQUEATHS TUSKEGEE $1,000,000

By Death of Mrs. A. J. Dotger of East Orange Booker T. Washington's Institute Is Enriched.

FOLLOWED HUSBAND'S WILL

Bequests Include Gifts to Orange Hospital, Library, and Charities—Donor's Fortune Made on Black Friday.

By the death of Mrs. Flora L. Dotger, widow of Andrew J. Dotger, who died at her home, in Montrose Avenue, East Orange, N. J., yesterday afternoon, the residue of her estate, valued at $1,000,000, will go to the Tuskegee Institute, of which Booker T. Washington is head. Mrs. Dotger was stricken with paralysis two weeks ago, and some hope was held out for her recovery until a few days ago, when she suffered a relapse. By her death a fund left by her husband to be distributed after his wife's death is released, and will be devoted to numerous charitable institutions.

As provided by the terms of Mr. Dotger's will the following will be beneficiaries to the amount of $10,000 each: Orange Memorial Hospital, South Orange Free Library, Orange Bureau of Associated Charities, Orange Valley Congregational Church, Orange Orphans' Home, German Hospital of Philadelphia.

Mrs. Dotger was born in Philadelphia sixty-eight years ago. She lived for a number of years in Brooklyn, and since coming to Orange twenty years ago had been prominent in charitable work.

Andrew J. Dotger died on Dec. 30, 1905, at the age of 70. At the time of his death he lived at South Orange, but he had lived in Brooklyn for a number of years. At one time he was associated with Drexel & Co., Philadelphia, and later was a member of the New York Stock Exchange. He made his fortune on Black Friday and retired, disposing of his seat on the Exchange. In the latter years of his life he devoted his time to his family and to charitable work.

Mr. Dotger left an estate valued at $1,000,000 in personal property, together with unscheduled realty. Under the terms of his will Tuskegee Institute was left a legacy of $650,000, with the provision that it was to go to the institute after his wife's death, she to enjoy the income during her life. In addition to this Mrs. Dotger was also liberally provided for.

Henry C. Dotger, a brother, received $50,000. His sister, Dora Seifert, $25,000; another sister, Anna C. Ney, the same amount, and a nephew, Carl Werner, $10,000. Clara E. Seidenstricker, a niece of Mrs. Dotger's, and her nephew, Victor Logo, received $20,000 each. Claire Richards, the child of an adopted daughter, also received $20,000, while other relatives divided about $50,000 between them.

FALLS INTO HOTEL CELLAR.

Woman Rescued from 35-Foot Excavation at the New Ritz-Carlton.

With a scream that was heard for blocks a woman, who said she was Mary Murray, 28 years old, of Thirty-fifth Street and Seventh Avenue, slipped and fell last night 35 feet into a space between the outer wall and the sidewalk on the Forty-seventh Street side of the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, under construction at Forty-seventh Street and Madison Avenue. She struck two planks about half way down, rolled from them, and plunged on down into three feet of water. She was taken to Flower Hospital in a serious condition.

Michael O'Rourke, a helper in the American Express Company's branch at Forty-seventh Street and Madison Avenue, saw the woman fall. He called Policeman Thiel of the East Fifty-first Street Station, who got a rope and let himself down into the hole. O'Rourke got a lantern and lowered it with another rope. Thiel found the woman with her head just above the surface of the water. Tying the rope about her waist, he yelled to the half dozen men wo had gathered above to pull away, and she was drawn up. The watchman of the building then went down and guided the policeman up a stairway.

Dr. Reid of Flower Hospital arrived in response to a call for an ambulance. He found that the woman was suffering from general contusions, a possible fracture of the skull, and shock, and said he could not tell what chance of recovery she had.

The space through which she fell was unguarded by railings, according to Policeman Thiel's report, but the watchman asserted that it had been guarded by barrels surmounted by planks, and that the woman in falling must have knocked the railing over.

TEXAS BALLOT FRAUDS.

Recount in Election for Judge Shows Ballots Uncounted and Tampered With

Special to The New York Times.

DALLAS, Texas, Aug. 26.—In view of revelations of fraud made by the recount of ballots in the District Judgeship contest of R. C. Roberts vs. Ross M. Scott, Judge Sewell of the Criminal District Court this afternoon delivered a special charge to the Dallas Grand Jury, instructing them to make thorough investigation and quoting to them the felony clause of the State election laws bearing on the matter.

The recount showed that votes were not counted for the candidate for whom they were cast and that the name left unchanged by the voter was scratched after his ballot had been made, so that, by the tampered ballot, he voted for neither candidate. These facts were disclosed under oath by voters on the witness stand.

The official returns of the Democratic primary election, held on July 23, gave Scott 52 majority. The recount so far made, with twenty of the eighty-one precincts yet to be recounted, has wiped out that majority and placed Roberts 72 votes ahead. The people are now clamoring for a recount of all the votes cast in Dallas County from Governor down to Constable.

TAFT'S ANGER TURNS UPON GRISCOM ALSO

Roosevelt Leader Knew His Friendliness When Attacks on Him Came from Oyster Bay.

HE ORDERED NO REPLIES

President Felt Keenly, However, Insinuations of Underhanded Acts—His Hands Off New York Fight.

BEVERLY, Mass., Aug. 26.—Indications continue to multiply here that President Taft's participation in the New York State fight is ended for good and all, and he will leave the situation to be handled in its entirety by the party leaders, including Theodore Roosevelt. The President will have nothing to say as to candidates or platform. He is not a resident of New York, and he does not feel it to be the province of the President of the United States to interfere or dictate in local fights.

Mr. Taft was drawn into New York politics reluctantly. He was glad to see the various leaders as they called, and he urged upon all the importance of trying to bring about an amicable adjustment of affairs prior to the State Convention. This, it appears, was impossible, and now the fight goes to the convention. Mr. Taft will keep "hands off."

According to recent callers at the Summer capital, the President feels far more keenly than he let appear in his letter to Mr. Griscom the false light he was placed in by anonymous statements issued from Oyster Bay and New York. The President had every reason to believe that leaders close to Col. Roosevelt knew exactly what his attitude was and what his actions had been. They had first-hand knowledge of the fact, it is said here, that Mr. Taft had done none of the underhand things charged against him.

It is pointed out here by Mr. Taft's friends that Lloyd C. Griscom, President of the New York County Republican Committee, who stood sponsor for Mr. Roosevelt in the State Committee meeting, was in President Taft's library at Burgess Point when the President sent the long telegram to Vice President Sherman, since made public, telling him to do nothing without the approval of Col. Roosevelt which would in any way involve the Administration.

Mr. Griscom, it is said here, took a copy of this telegram back to New York with him. Armed with this message, which outlined the President's position, and fresh from a conference with President Taft that lasted nearly all night, Mr. Griscom went almost immediately to see Col. Roosevelt.

In view of these facts Mr. Taft was thoroughly wrought up when he read the subsequent newspaper attacks from Oyster Bay and New York. He wrote his letter to Mr. Griscom as a matter of satisfaction to himself, and declared, as he sent it, that it was a matter of entire indifference to him whether it was ever made public or not.

The President in the meantime warned every one connected with the Administration in Beverly to make no reply to Oyster Bay in any way.

Soon after the recent incidents at New York it was announced that Mr. Griscom would visit Beverly in a few days. It is said here that Mr. Griscom has no engagement to see the President.

Mr. Taft had a quiet Friday. There were two visitors, Gov. Franklin Fort of New Jersey, who was a guest at luncheon, and Senator Henry Cabot Lodge, who motored over from Nahant. Neither of them called at the executive office, and nothing was given out about their visits. Gov. Fort is stopping in Massachusetts for a few days. Senator Lodge has visited the President twice since early July, once with ex-President Roosevelt and again one Sunday the latter part of last month.

SHOT TWO IN SLEEPING CAR.

Niagara Falls Man Turned Insane, Killed Porter, and Wounded Doctor.

ELLIS, Kan., Aug. 26.—Harry Pugh of Niagara Falls, N. Y., became insane on a sleeping car of a Union Pacific train near here early to-day and shot the porter, named Young, and Dr. E. H. Temple of Kansas City. The porter died afterward in Kansas City.

Pugh had acted queerly in the evening, but talked agreeably with other passengers. In the night he shot through the end of his berth into the smoking room. The porter ran toward his berth, and was shot twice through the body. Dr. Temple, who was on the way from Denver with his wife and child, sprang into the aisle and Pugh shot him twice through the abdomen. The conductor and brakeman then overpowered Pugh and he was placed in jail here. Dr. Temple was taken from the train at Ellsworth, unconscious, and apparently dying. Pugh is about 28 years old.

MORE COTTON MILLS CLOSED.

Curtailment of Production Given as the Reason for It.

MANCHESTER, N. H., Aug. 26.—Fifteen thousand employes of the Amoskeag Cotton Manufacturing Company were thrown out of work to-day when the seventeen mills of the plant closed for fifteen days. Curtailment of production was the reason for the shutdown.

FITCHBURG, Mass., Aug. 26.—The Parkhill Gingham Mills here will be closed from Sept. 3 until Sept. 12. Several other local textile plants are also curtailing the output.

CHICOPEE, Mass., Aug. 26.—The Chicopee Manufacturing Company's cotton mills here were shut down to-day until Sept. 12. They employ about 2,000 operatives. M. A. Rawlinson, agent of the company, said the shutdown was in accordance with the general plan of the different companies operating mills in New England.

Announcement was made that on Sept. 2 the mills of the Dwight Manufacturing Company would close until Sept. 12. They employ about 2,500 hands.

SENATOR DICK CANNOT PAY.

Sheriff Vainly Searches for Property of Ohio Leader in Home County.

Special to The New York Times.

AKRON, Ohio, Aug. 26.—That Senator Charles Dick has no property in Summit County, in which Akron, his home, is located, was reported to the Probate Court here to-day by Sheriff Stein.

"I find no chattels, goods, lands, or property on which to levy," recites the Sheriff in his return of an order of execution issued against Senator Dick on a judgment for $4,066 obtained on notes held by the Security Trust and Savings Bank of Zanesville, Ohio. The judgment was obtained July 15 by C. T. Grant, an Akron attorney. Since that time the Sheriff has held the papers, and it was after a supposed search for property owned by the Senator that the return was made to-day. Probate Judge Little has issued a summons to Senator Dick to answer in his court Monday to the order of execution.

It had been supposed that the beautiful home of the Senator on West Market Street, in the fashionable residence district, belonged to him, and that he held other property, real or personal, though he never has been regarded as a wealthy man.

SAVED HER BABY; MAY DIE.

Kansas Mother Held Up Child Eight Hours in a Cistern.

SEDAN, Kan., Aug. 26.—Standing in five feet of water in the bottom of a cistern at her home, near here, Mrs. John Burch, wife of a farmer, for eight hours to-day held aloft her two-year-old child until the arrival home of her husband.

The child fell into the cistern, and the mother immediately sprang after it, seized the baby in her arms, raised it above the surface of the water and called for help. No one responded until her husband returned from his work in the fields. After being taken from the cistern Mrs. Burch collapsed and is dangerously ill.

GRADY HEADS THE EAGLES.

Senator Will Quit Public Office—Hering Recovers from Collapse.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Aug. 26.—President Frank E. Hering of the Fraternal Order of Eagles, who collapsed during the meeting of the Grand Aerie last night at which four former officials were found guilty of having diverted funds of the order, had recovered sufficiently to preside at to-day's session. His collapse was due to nervous exhaustion.

In the election of officers Thomas F. Grady of New York, automatically succeeded President Hering. Senator Grady announced last Spring that when he succeeded to this post he would give up public office. Thus a new State Senator must be elected in New York next Fall.

HAD TWO LIVE TEDDY BEARS.

Ethan Allen Crawford Impersonates Roosevelt at a Ball.

Special to The New York Times.

BRETTON WOODS, N. H., Aug. 26.—Dr. J. Blake White of New York spoke so eloquently in behalf of the employes of Bretton Woods upon the occasion of their annual masked ball in the ballroom of the Mount Washington Hotel this evening that several hundred dollars was raised for the employes' benefit association. Eight hundred guests of the Mount Washington and Mount Pleasant watched the 250 couples in fancy dress march into the ballroom, where dancing continued until after midnight.

The feature of the evening was the appearance of Ethan Allen Crawford, grandson of the pioneer of the Granite Hills, who impersonated Theodore Roosevelt and appeared in the ballroom with two Teddy bears, real black bear cubs eight weeks old.

NEW TURN IN BRIBERY CASE.

Special Grand Jury to Take Up Perjury and Jury Tampering.

CHICAGO, Aug. 26.—The second trial of Lee O'Neil Browne, Democratic minority leader of the Illinois Legislature, charged with bribing Representative C. A. White to vote for William Lorimer for United States Senator, took a new turn to-day, when Judge Theodore Brentano ordered a special Grand Jury to assemble on Aug. 30 to investigate charges of perjury and "other matters."

Judge Brentano ordered the Grand Jury on a petition from State Attorney Wayman. The prosecuting attorney maintained secrecy as to the exact purpose of the special Grand Jury, refusing to say who would be questioned on the perjury charge or what the "other matters" would include. In the courtroom, however, it was declared that alleged jury tampering will be investigated.

George Gloss, called by the defense today, contradicted the testimony given by Sidney Yarbrough. The latter had testified that he was with Representative White in St. Louis the night arrangements to vote for William Lorimer were said to have been made. Gloss testified that Yarbrough had spent the night in question with him. This testimony was corroborated by Mrs. Gloss.

TILLMAN'S NEPHEW, HE SAYS.

Army Captain Bearing Senator's Name Is Held for Forgery in Wisconsin.

Special to The New York Times.

EAU CLAIRE, Wis., Aug. 26.—A man named Benjamin F. Tillman, claiming to be a nephew of Senator Tillman of South Carolina, was arrested here last night on a charge of forgery preferred in Madison, and was taken there to-night.

He says he is a Captain in the Twenty-seventh United States Infantry, stationed at Fort Sheridan, near Chicago. He wore a Captain's uniform, and four other uniforms were found in his baggage. He says he was on his way to visit Fort Snelling. He asserts his innocence and says he is a victim of circumstances.

Inquiry at the United States Army headquarters in St. Paul disclosed that there is a Benjamin Tillman who is Captain of Company G. Twenty-seventh Infantry, Fort Sheridan.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 26.—Capt. Benjamin J. Tillman of the Sixteenth Infantry was appointed Second Lieutenant in 1898 from South Carolina. The following year he was promoted to First Lieutenant, and to Captain in 1903, being transferred to his present command in 1908. He belongs to the family of which Senator Tillman is the most distinguished member, though the exact relationship is not known here. The Senator has two sons, one a lawyer in South Carolina, and the other a clerk to the Senate Committee of which the Senator is Chairman.

ROOSEVELT TO AVERT HIS OWN NOMINATION

Friends on Whom He Can Rely Will Oppose Old Guard Plan on the Governorship.

CORRUPTION IS HIS ISSUE

Receptions in Iowa and Kansas Show He Is Still Regarded as Leader of the Progressives.

Special to The New York Times.

FREMONT, Neb., Aug. 26.—Through Iowa and Nebraska to-day Col. Roosevelt has had another demonstration of the fact that the people out here still regard him as their political leader. It has been a day of short stops and brief speeches, like a regular campaign trip, with enthusiasm at the yelling pitch all along and crowds with bands and banners everywhere.

Early in the day Col. Roosevelt took another shot at the Republican organization bosses in New York State. At the second stop of the day, at Ames, the morning papers were brought aboard the train, with reports of the statement issued last night by Chairman Woodruff of the New York Republican State Committee. The stress laid by Woodruff on the issue of direct primaries at once caught the attention of the Colonel, and he made this reply:

> The progressives are emphatically in favor of taking a real step forward about direct primaries, substantially on the lines of Gov. Hughes's proposition, but this is not the main issue. The main issue is that we stand against bossism, big or little, and in favor of genuine popular rule, not only at the elections but within the party organization, and above all, that our war is ruthless against every species of corruption, big and little, and against the alliance between corrupt business and corrupt politics, as to which it has been found that too often in the past the boss system has offered a peculiarly efficient and objectionable means of communication. We are against the domination of the party and the public by special interests, whether these special interests are political, business, or a compound of the two.

Preparing to Balk the Bosses.

It has been plain to Col. Roosevelt all along that the New York Old Guard would endeavor to confine the issues to the primary question. As his statement shows, he is immensely interested in that matter. But it is only one of a number of questions which he intends to force to the front in the coming campaign, and the chief of these is the rule of the bosses. He has already given a number of rallying cries for the New York progressives, such as "Throw out the crooks," and "Cleanliness, honesty, and decency." No matter what efforts the bosses can make, the Colonel intends to see to it that these matters are kept to the fore throughout the campaign. He has the Old Guard crowd on the run, and he doesn't propose to let up for a minute. He showed that by the promptness with which he came back at them after reading the Woodruff statement.

It may also be said that Col. Roosevelt understands perfectly the game of the Woodruff-Sherman-Barnes crowd will endeavor with all their political skill to play on him. They will make a pretense of coming entirely into camp and will then contend that the logical outcome must be the nomination of Roosevelt for the Governorship. That would give them the finest possible opportunity for the use of the snickersnees they are already getting ground.

This plan won't work. Col. Roosevelt will not have the nomination for the Governorship, and will see to it that there will be no serious attempt in the convention, outside of his Old Guard enemies, to bring forward his name. He has already announced to several of his friends that he would not permit the use of his name at Saratoga, and indications already are that the convention will be certainly dominated by men on whom he can rely absolutely and that his wishes in this respect will be regarded.

Roosevelt Not Seeking Office.

It is just as well, perhaps, to go further right now and say that Col. Roosevelt is not a candidate for any office whatever. He is interested very much, however, in advancing the policies for which he has stood, and for which he labored during the years he was in the White House. He will continue to stand for them, no matter whether it hurts him in popular estimation or not.

Moreover, in reaching a full understanding of his position it is necessary to take into consideration not merely isolated sentences from one speech or another and individual declarations at one place or another, but the whole record of his public utterances and his public actions. It is a case of the "Constitution must be construed as a whole." His friends hold that his record is thoroughly consistent, both in speech and deed, and that his present course is in entire harmony with the record. Thus it is felt that the scheme of the New York bosses will fail from the start, one reason for its failure being that its framers, even after their years of experience with him, seem not yet to have learned to understand him.

The statement of this morning with regard to the New York situation, for instance, was at once received out here as having no small bearing upon issues in this part of the country. The "alliance between corrupt business and corrupt politics" has been one of the cries of the most advanced insurgents for a long time. So this declaration was taken to mean that Col. Roosevelt was lining up with the insurgents out here. As a matter of fact that phrase only repeats what Col. Roosevelt often said publicly while he was President, and his antagonism to that kind of an alliance is part of his record. Later in the day he took occasion to emphasize its immediate application to the New York situation, but at the same time to declare his personal application of it to all the country. He used it in the New York statement chiefly because he was thereby enforcing his position that the primaries question was only one of a number of issues, but he promptly gave it additional scope as well.

Meets Cummins, to Aid Insurgent.

Two Iowa politicians joined the train at Ames, Senator Cummins and Charles Grilk, the insurgent candidate for Congress, who won the nomination at the primaries in the Davenport district. Mr. Grilk was anxious to get Col. Roosevelt to make a speech for him, and the Colonel promised to do so. Col. Roosevelt has made it plain in agreeing to deliver his speeches that he can do so only when the occasion is such that it does not interfere with other plans. He had previously agreed to speak at the State Educational Conference at Des Moines on Nov. 3. He found that he could stop off at Davenport on his way to or from Des Moines and make the talk for Mr. Grilk without interfering with other engagements, and so agreed to do so.

Senator Cummins also put in a word with the Colonel on behalf of Mr. Grilk. The Senator traveled the rest of the way across Iowa with the Colonel and had an extended talk with him about local and general conditions. Mr. Cummins is especially interested in a plan for a Nation-wide primary for the nomination of candidates for the Presidency and Vice Presideney, and he discussed that with the Colonel for some time.

Speaks in Unconventional Garb.

The people of Illinois, outside of Chicago, had no chance to see Col. Roosevelt, because his car passed through there in the night. Iowans, however, did not permit him to stay abed late. When the train made a stop at Marshalltown there were hundreds of enthusiasts at the station, and they yelled for the Colonel. He was not up, but the clamor became so loud that he threw a raincoat over his pajamas and put on a pair of slippers, and went to the rear platform of his car. He was smiling but he protested to the crowd that he had not been scheduled to speak there, and so was not ready.

The crowd still demanded some words from him, and so he delivered his first speech in what he termed "the heart of the Nation." He said he was glad to get back to his own country, although he had enjoyed the lions in Africa more than they enjoyed him. Expressing interest in the children of the assemblage, he suggested that it would not be well to depend on immigration for an increase of the population of the country. He was frequently interrupted by cheering.

As he was finishing he noticed that several photographers had brought their cameras into action.

"It is an outrage," he protested, "to take my picture in this garb."

At Ames there was a great crowd out to see and hear the Colonel. The local militia company was out to guard the route from the car to the speaking stand, and the town was decorated with flags and bunting

Warm Greeting to Cummins.

Senator Cummins, who had traveled from Des Moines in order to welcome him, appeared as he was about to address the large gathering.

"Hello, Cummins. By George, I'm glad to see you," shouted Col. Roosevelt, as he grasped the hand of the Iowa Senator and shook it vigorously. The two men were soon in earnest conversation while the people looked on with interest. Senator Cummins accompanied the party through the State.

The Roosevelt train arrived at Boone at 8:30 and departed at 8:42. Col. Roosevelt addressed an audience of 2,000 during the stop. The train stopped at Boone Viaduct, over the Des Moines River, to permit a picture to be taken.

At Ogden a brass band was on hand. A tall man held up twins, which gave an opportunity to Col. Roosevelt to express his views concerning his favorite crop, that of children.

At Jefferson a little girl with a Teddy bear made strenuous efforts to attract the attention of Col. Roosevelt, and he greeted her cordially, remarking that he liked to see the "Teddy bear." He expressed his views concerning the desirability of improving farm life. "I am glad to see the cities grow, provided they do not grow at the expense of the country," he said. "In the last analysis the man on the farm is the man upon whom our whole civilization rests. The growth and progress of the country depend upon him. I want to see conditions kept favorable for him and for his wife, don't forget that."

A company of State militia met the train at Carroll and escorted Col. Roosevelt to a near-by stand from which he addressed the people. Again he spoke of the need of the farm and the farmer in obtaining the highest development of the country.

No Votes for Corporations.

Col. Roosevelt had made small reference to politics up to this time, but at Denison he said some things that made the insurgents howl with joy.

"Iowa is the State in which people are fortunately typical of what the American people should be," he said. "In fact they place the general interest before the special interests. This, my friends, is the problem that is before the American people to-day. We must subordinate special interests to the public good.

"I want to stand for the corporations when they are right, so that they can have conditions under which they can earn dividends, but corporations are not entitled to votes and are not entitled to the ownership of any public man.

"Here in Iowa the conditions of your life have been such that I feel that this State affords a peculiarly favorable field for work. Put the Nation and keep the Nation on the plane it must be put and kept if we are to continue to make this great Republic the greatest example that the world has ever seen of successful popular government, of government by and for the people."

When he declared that "Corporations should not be entitled to votes or to the ownership of public men" the crowd simply went wild. He had struck the most popular note he could touch in the West.

Big Reception at Council Bluffs.

The greatest reception and demonstration of the day was prepared for Col. Roosevelt at Council Bluffs, where he stopped for an hour in the middle of the afternoon. This is the home of Judge Walter I. Smith, the standpat friend of Speaker Cannon, who was successful in the primaries for renomination. Judge Smith has been mentioned frequently as the Republican choice for Speaker to succeed "Uncle Joe." He was at the train to greet the Colonel, and rode with him through the city on an automobile trip that was made before the speechmaking. In the course of it Col. Roosevelt visited J. F. Wilcox, a radical progressive supporter of Senator Cummins.

Col. Roosevelt's automobile was driven at the head of a long line of cars over business and residence streets. Business houses and residences along the line were well decorated and the streets for the entire distance were lined with people.

Finally the Colonel was taken to a stand in Bayliss Park, where a crowd of two or three thousand people had gathered. Judge Smith introduced the Colonel as the "most distinguished American." Mr. Roosevelt spoke there longer than at any place since his opening speech at Oriskany on Tuesday. He had hardly begun when some one called out, "How about New York?"

"Well, there is the New York issue," the Colonel said. "It is perfectly plain that I stand primarily for political cleanliness and decency and for popular rule. Sometimes I do not agree with all the people. I try my best to represent them as far as I can; I will do anything for them except that which is wrong, and that I will not do for any man.

"It is our duty to war against corruption in every form. Distrust the man who appeals to you on the ground that he is against the corruption of one particular class, but cannot see corruption in some one else. I know financiers and the papers that represent great financiers, who are bitter against corruption in small politicians, or in labor leaders, but who cannot see it in great business men or concerns."

Aside from these words there was no reference to policies. There was not a word that could be taken as an indorsement of Judge Smith. Immediately at the close of Col. Roosevelt's speech there were loud and insistent calls for Senator Cummins, which continued as the Roosevelt party hurried to their automobiles and back to the train.

At Omaha, which was passed through hurriedly, Col. Roosevelt was joined by his son Archie, who has been spending part of the Summer on a Dakota ranch, and also by former Secretary of the Interior James R. Garfield, who is going through with him to Cheyenne, where he is due to-morrow.

Noisy Welcome in Nebraska.

The first stop out of Omaha was at Fremont, and it showed that the Colonel's popularity had not waned in Nebraska. There was a big crowd at the station, and for the first stop on the trip powder was burned in rendering a salute. A pair of anvils had been brought down to the track by some enthusiasts, and as the train rolled in they began firing. They kept it up until the Colonel was well away, and the last of Fremont that those on the train heard was the boom of these anvils.

The insurgents in this part of the country are more than pleased with the trend of affairs, since the Colonel got back openly to the game of politics. Senator Cummins did not undertake to disguise his satisfaction over the tone of Col. Roosevelt's speeches. He was also happy that the Colonel had agreed to help Mr. Grlik, who has a hard fight in his district. There is a good deal of hopeful talk heard out here with regard to the Congressional elections, but it is merely hopeful and not confident.

A slight hoarseness developed in Col. Roosevelt's voice to-day. He does not expect any difficulty in making all of his speeches, but the constant strain of car platform talks has caused a slight sensitiveness to his throat. He probably will have some rest during the trip to Cheyenne, where he is due to-morrow.

BARNES OFF TO GET UP-STATE DELEGATES

Leader of the Old Guard Already Sure of Controlling 515 Out of 1,015.

TO PUT IT UP TO ROOSEVELT

Will Make Him the Candidate or Permanent Chairman and Then Drop Support on Election Day.

William Barnes, Jr., Republican boss of Albany County, and the only member of the Old Guard who has talked fight to Col. Roosevelt as a result of the muddle over the selection of Vice President James S. Sherman for Temporary Chairman of the Republican State Convention, will leave for up State this morning. Having decided upon a plan of campaign against the insurgent element of the party, now headed by Col. Roosevelt, during his conference with Timothy L. Woodruff and other leaders, Mr. Barnes will take a trip through the State with a view of getting in close touch with possible convention delegates and sounding the Roosevelt and direct nominations sentiment.

Last night Mr. Barnes went carefully over the schedule of delegates and figured out that out of a total of 1,015 the machine element will be able to control 515, or a majority. He would not go into details, however. He appeared to be pretty well satisfied with the way he and Mr. Woodruff had planned their campaign. He feels certain that Mr. Roosevelt, if he attends the convention, will be nominated for Governor and then be forced to take the consequences.

If this plan fails Mr. Barnes has still another move. It is to saddle the active management of the campaign upon the Colonel and make him responsible for the result. Mr. Woodruff has made up his mind not to be Chairman of the State Committee any longer, even if his faction should win out at Saratoga, and if Mr. Roosevelt should succeed in averting his nomination for Governor the Old Guard hopes to foist the State Chairmanship upon him.

Hard to Get Campaign Funds.

This would put the management of the campaign squarely up to Col. Roosevelt and he would have to assume entire responsibility for what happens at the polls. The Barnes crowd relies strongly upon the slim chances there will be of getting campaign money. It is going to be mighty hard to get funds this year.

Col. Roosevelt has gone on record as opposing campaign contributions, and the indications are that Wall Street or corporate interests will not come to his assistance when the outlook for the party this Fall is so gloomy. Col. Roosevelt, they say, will need a whole lot of money to fight the Democrats, particularly if Mayor Gaynor should be nominated, and Mr. Barnes voiced the sentiments of his associates yesterday when he asked, "Where is he going to get it?"

"I was quoted this morning," said Mr. Barnes, "as saying that it cost $800,000 to elect Gov. Hughes. I did not make the remark for publication, but now that it is put up to me I will not deny that I said it. I believe it cost more than this amount to elect him. It could not possibly have been done for less. Where is Mr. Roosevelt going to get this sum? His efforts will be worth watching."

Mr. Barnes was reminded that Col. Roosevelt had stated yesterday that bossism was the predominant issue.

"That's right," replied the Albany boss "Bossism is the issue. There can be no doubt of that. I believe this man Roosevelt is trying hard to be boss of his own State. Yesterday it was crooks. As to the Colonel's determination to rid the party of crooks, there can certainly be no compromise on that question, because there is no fight.

For a "Let Alone" Policy.

"What the people of the country want is be let alone. They want to be allowed to go about their own business in peace. What the business life of the country needs is to be saved from the peril which is impending, bolstered up by this wanton political agitation. It is not a question of politics, but a question of the business life of the State. It is going to be hard work, as Mr. Woodruff says, to rehabilitate the convention, as the politicians are straining for an issue to arouse the passion of the public mind. It would not do the party any harm to read The Federalist once in a while."

Mr. Barnes was asked if he would support Mr. Roosevelt if the Colonel should get the Gubernatorial nomination.

"This whole thing is being taken too seriously," he replied. "It ought to be viewed in a humorous light."

Lloyd C. Griscom, President of the Republican County Committee, left the city last night. He said he intended to go to Fairfield, Conn., to remain over Sunday. It was while he was at Fairfield last week that Mr. Griscom got in touch with President Taft at Beverly with the result that the President sent him the letter accusing Vice President Sherman of tricking him. Mr. Griscom was asked if he intended to get in touch with the President again. He evaded the question by remarking that he did not expect to call upon the President in the near future.

Mr. Griscom appeared to be greatly amused by the explanation which Mr. Woodruff had made regarding what went on immediately before and during the meeting of the State Committee on Aug. 16, when Mr. Sherman was selected over Mr. Roosevelt for temporary Chairman of the State Convention.

"I would suggest that Mr. Woodruff again read President Taft's letter to me of Aug. 20," suggested the County Chairman.

Woodruff Once for Primaries.

Mr. Griscom gave out a statement furnished him by Darwin R. James, President of the Brooklyn Young Republican Club, which sought to show that three years ago Mr. Woodruff was a champion of the direct primary plan. The statement reads:

> At the Kings County Republican convention of 1907 Woodruff from the platform advocated direct nominations, insisting, however, that they must be mandatory and applied to all parties. Subsequently the Executive Committee of Kings County appointed a committee to confer with the committee of the Young Republican Club to draft a direct nominations bill. The two committees met and agreed upon a bill which was subsequently the Hinman-Greene bill. Prior to this action the Republican County Committee of Kings had on several occasions passed resolutions favoring direct nominations. The resolutions of the Executive Committee and the County Committee have never been reversed or modified in any respect. Apparently Woodruff is insurging against the County Committee of Kings County.

Mr. Griscom said he had not verified the charges, but he had no reason to believe that Mr. James had overstated the facts. Some of Mr. Griscom's friends dissected Mr. Woodruff's statement for the County Chairman.

"Mr. Griscom has plenty of facts to back up all the charges made by President Taft and himself against the Barnes-Woodruff-Ward crowd," said one of these friends. "Mr. Woodruff states that he only followed the precedent established two years ago in the Elihu Root case in selecting a Temporary Chairman when he did, but if this is so, why were several up-State committeemen kept in the dark regarding what was to take place at the meeting? These men were informed that the only business that would be undertaken at the meeting would be the setting of the day for the convention. With this assurance they remained away.

What Roosevelt Said.

"Again, Mr. Woodruff in his letter to Col. Roosevelt states that he did not know that Col. Roosevelt wanted the position of Temporary Chairman. This is clearly refuted by the fact that when Col. Roosevelt met Mr. Barnes and Mr. Ward at the Manhattan Hotel immediately following the committee meeting the Colonel plainly stated that they must have known that he desired the position and the Colonel quoted this bit of verse:

> "Of course it was right to dissemble your love,
> But why did you kick me down stairs.

"Mr. Woodruff also states that it came as a great surprise to him when Mr. Griscom, at the meeting, offered the resolution naming Mr. Roosevelt in place of Mr. Sherman. Mr. Woodruff must know that he is not telling the truth about this, for Mr. Griscom, several hours before the meeting, told Mr. Wadsworth and Mr. Ward that the Colonel desired the position, and it is unthinkable that they did not tell Mr. Woodruff."

Mr. Woodruff remained in town only a few hours yesterday, and then went to Garden City to remain over Sunday. He had another talk with Mr. Barnes, and when it was over he said he did not have anything to add to his statement of Thursday.

Mr. Woodruff sent a letter yesterday to Rogers Clark and H. Le Roy Austin, who are making an investigation into the sale of timber lands in the Adirondacks, explaining in detail how he acquired the Kamp Kill Kare property, and demanding the facts in the transaction be spread upon the minutes of the inquiry now going on at Albany.

The State Chairman refused to disclose the contents of the letter, but he said he hoped it would be made public at the investigation. It was not intended as a defense in any way, he said, because there was nothing to defend. Mr. Woodruff, it is said, paid twice as much per acre for the land that he acquired as that paid by the State for adjoining property.

The serious Vossische Zeitung, the Tageblatt, the Post, and other papers point out the constitutional character of the Kingdom of Prussia in the empire, and inquire whether the Chancellor, Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg, was privy to the Kaiser's purpose of delivering such a speech. They predict that it will lead to a renewed discussion of the Kaiser's constitutional position when the Reichstag reassembles in November.

The strongly monarchist Tageliche Rundschau, the favorite journal of army officers, says: "This speech means a storm. * * * Never before has Emperor William set into such clear relief his romantic, mediaeval idea of his non-responsibility to man's judgment, of his not being bound by the constitutional co-operation of the people and of ruling by God's free grace against all those convictions and feeling which to-day determine our existence as a State."

"Why," asks the Tageliche Rundschau, "should the Emperor choose this moment to emphasize his ruling by God's grace and his own right when it will nourish an anti-monarchical agitation and good monarchists be thrown into a condition of tragic disruption?"

The organ of the landed nobility, the Deutsche Tageszeitung, thoroughly approves of the declarations of the Kaiser. The Lokal Anzeiger lays stress upon the desire of the Emperor that the people cooperate with him, and points out that the Emperor delivered the speech in the castle where the Prussian Kings were formerly crowned. He said in the same hall in May, 1890: "We Hohenzollerns take our crown from heaven alone," and in the same place, on Sept. 6, 1894, he quoted the words of his grandfather, William I., about ruling by divine right and added: "So, too, do I take my kingdom by God's grace."

The Tageblatt affirms that although prices did not fall on the Exchange, trading slackened and brokers apprehend an unfavorable influence of the speech upon markets at home and abroad.

Many of the newspapers declare the Kaiser's speech to be a résumé of many of the most striking views already expressed by his Majesty, but in the most intense form he has yet adopted, and declare that in his two years' holding aloof from things political his Majesty's opinions have not changed at all.

The Socialist press seizes upon the absolutist principles uttered in the speech and th eopen declaration of antagonism between the imperial will and the will of the people to govern themselves. One of these newspapers points out that the chasm revealed in 1908 by the London Daily Telegraph's interview with the Emperor is now broader and deeper than ever. The Frankfurter Zeitung says the speech shows a regrettable lack of understanding, on the Kaiser's part, of the sentiments of the people.

The National Liberal Leipziger Tageblatt sees in the speech "a thoroughgoing absolutist political creed so unvarnished that no constitutional ruler of the present day dare utter it."

The Berlin National Zeitung, a National Liberal organ of moderate views, says that the Kaiser has placed himself wittingly in antagonism to the Reichstag and that his speech will have an exactly opposite effect to what he intended. It adds that the most sycophantic professors of political science have dropped the theory of ruelrship by divine right.

The speech was an incident of the Kaiser's tour of Eastern Germany, in connection with his visit to Posen to dedicate the new royal castle there. His Majesty urged upon the provincials of Koenigsberg the necessity of co-operation with him in his work for the welfare and defense of the country. Taking as a text the rôle of Queen Louise of Prussia during the Napoleonic wars, he extolled her virtues and pointed out how her memory had fired the courage of Prussian soldiers and saved the country.

"What does the lofty figure of Queen Louise teach us?" he asked. "It teaches us that we men should cultivate all the military virtues and be always willing to use them in defense of the country. Above all else it teaches us to maintain the equipment of our army, in view of the enormous stride made by our neighbors, for only on being prepared for war does our peace depend."

German women, said the Emperor, should learn from Queen Louise that their chief duty does not lie in participating in public meetings and societies nor in attaining supposed rights in which they may be able to do the same things as men, "but in quiet work at home and in the family." They should train, he said, the young generations before all things in obedience and respect toward age. They should make it clear to their children and to their children's children that they should not strive to live at the cost of others nor at the cost of their Fatherland, but that on the contrary they should have the Fatherland alone in mind, devoting all their strength and intelligence to the welfare of the country."

SAYS MURPHY LEVIES ON OFFICE SEEKERS

P. E. Dowe Declares This Condition Made Him Withdraw as Aspirant for State Office.

MURPHY JUST IGNORED HIM

His Information Came from Other Sources—Now He Speaks of an Independent Ticket.

Special to The New York Times.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., Aug. 26.—P. E. Dowe of Black River, N. Y., President of the Commercial Travelers' National League of America, who had been a candidate for the Democratic nomination for Lieutenant Governor of New York, to-day issued a statement explaining his withdrawal from the race and attacking Charles F. Murphy.

Mr. Dowe is here on business. He says in his statement:

"I found that under the conditions imposed, emanating from the absolute boss of the Democraatic Party, to accept the nominatiton would be to destroy my high ideal of true citizenship and good government, to lessen my standard of manhood, and to cause the loss of self-respect and to practically eliminate the legitimate emolument of office through assessments, campaign contributions, and expenses.

"I know more about the aims and designs of the Murphy machine than I did two weeks ago.

"The Progessive Travelers' Political League will assist to place an independent citizens' ticket in the field, and the traveling men are now securing the necessary signatures. The central State headquarters will be maintained at the St. Cloud Hotel, Syracuse, as long as the people indicate a disposition to take matters into their own hands."

Mr. Dowe, in speaking of his experience with the machine, said to-night that the commercial travelers had put him in the field against his wish, but he decided to see the thing through. He wrote several letters to Mr. Murphy, but all were ignored.

"I had previously in my letters to him," said Mr. Dowe, "shown that the people were opposed to 'bossism,' but I might as well have appealed to a stone wall. He never replied to a single one of these letters, and denied me all communication.

"I was in Albany on Aug. 19, the day the Democrats were holding a meeting in Saratoga to decide on the date and place of meeting for the State Convention. I met a number of politicians on the way to that Mecca of political graft, Saratoga. They all invited me to 'see Murphy,' and one in particular, who said he was close to Murphy, and whom I took to be his henchman, informed me that everybody had to see Murphy. I'm not the sort of man who will kiss the toes o fa self-constituted pope of politics, and I wired him three times that day, but received no reply.

"The first message said: 'Would appreciate one word regarding my candidacy. Is it to be or not to be?'

"The second read: 'Five minutes' conversation will solve matters of vital importance. Where can I meet you to-morrow?' The third read: 'Non-attention to my communications as a representative of the commercial travelers will be regarded as purposed neglect. I prefer peace, but am equipped for war. You have me on fighting edge.'

"In the meantime I had been making investigations, and found that candidates in the past had been forced to separate themselves from a large part of their salaries in order to get their nominations. I can refer to men who have held office during Democratic supremacy to show this, and on the witness stand they would not dare deny that they had paid for their offices. The boss himself will never approach a man directly. He sends his henchman, and the whole matter is tactfully covered up and is always below board. I was given to understand through a henchman what I would have to pay, and found that the amount would put me in office with my salary wiped out."

GAYNOR LIKE ROOSEVELT.

Edward M Shepard Couples Them as Leaders of the People.

Special to The New York Times.

SARATOGA, N. Y, Aug. 26.—Edward M. Shepard of Brooklyn, in an address before 10,000 people at the county fair today, praised the vigorous denunciation by newspapers of public wrongdoing.

"Beyond a doubt," he continued, "the country owes a debt to political leaders who, like Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Gaynor, without regard to whether they are right or wrong, have helped to arouse and even inflame and excite popular concern with the affairs of government.

CANNON TO AID SLEMP.

Roosevelt Also Will Speak for Virginia Republican Congressman.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn., Aug. 26.—Speaker Cannon will visit the Ninth Virginia District to assist Congressman T. B. Slemp in his campaign. Slemp was an ardent supporter of Cannon in the rules fight in the House.

Former President Roosevelt will also visit the Ninth District in behalf of Slemp, speaking at Bristol Oct. 7.

Olcott Indorsed for Congress.

At a Captains' meeting at the Riverside Republican Club of the Seventeenth Assembly District last night, J. Van Vechten Olcott was unanimously indorsed for renomination for Congress for the Fifteenth Congressional District. Abraham Gruber presided at the meeting.

CHARITY LEADS TO ARREST.

Woman Sends Flower to a Mission, Giving Worthless Check in Payment.

A woman who said she was Elizabeth Burch and that she lived at the Pierpont Hotel, 43 West Thirty-second Street, was arrested at the entrance to Central Park at Fifth Avenue and Fifty-ninth Street yesterday afternoon by Detective Michael Dolan. She was charged with passing worthless checks.

The complaint was made by Louis Gottlieb, who is employed in a florist's store at 609 Madison Avenue. He said she bought flowers amounting to $77.50 for a mission in Eighth Avenue and gave checks for $25 and $42.50 drawn on the Fifth Avenue Bank, where she had no account.

When called to account by Morris Gottlieb, who owns the florist store, she wept and gave him $10, and promised to pay the rest. He waited two weeks for a settlement, which did not come.

Miss Burch was arraigned before Magistrate O'Connor in the Yorkville Court, and paroled until this morning. The complainant said last night that he regretted that he had made the charge. He said Mrs. Burch had dealt with his concern before and had paid her bills, paying some of them with checks which had been honored.

At the home of Dr. T. Hamilton Burch, 130 West Fifty-seventh Street, his mother said that Mrs. Elizabeth Burch was the wife of Dr. T. Hamilton Burch, but that they had been separated for almost ten years. The younger Mrs. Burch, she said, came of a good family in Providence and was wealthy. The property, however, by reason of Mrs. Burch's mental condition, was in the hands of trustees. She said that if Mrs. Burch had been arrested in a check transaction she was sure that a mistake had been made. At the Pierpont Hotel it was said that no woman by the name of Burch ever lived there.

May Close Bronx Marriage Bureau.

President Miller of the Bronx yesterday sent copies of a letter to all the Bronx clergymen asking them to announce to their congregations that the branch marriage license bureau established in the Bronx is liable to be closed for lack of funds. The branch bureau was established at Borough Hall, 177th Street and Third Avenue, at the request of citizens of the Bronx, who complained that the City Hall, Manhattan, ten miles away, was too far for persons desiring to take out licenses to travel.

TO GET SIBLEY ACCOUNTS.

Officers of Oil Company and Bankers Summoned in Bribery Matter.

FRANKLIN, Penn., Aug. 26.—Officers of the Galena Signal Oil Company, a subsidiary of the Standard Oil Company, have been subpoenaed in the auditing by the court of the expense account of Joseph C. Sibley, who was the Congressional nominee of the Republican Party in the Twenty-eighth district. The audit, which was ordered by court for next Monday, will go into details covering the disposal of $42,500 to which Mr. Sibley made affidavit.

The Galena Signal Oil Company is cited to produce all books and papers that would tend to show any moneys or securities that may have been placed to the credit of Sibley between Jan. 1 and July 1, 1910. The primary campaign was waged between those dates. Sibley and his secretary, F. H. Taylor, were served with a new subpoena to-day, directing them to bring their bank books and the Presidents of two banks where Sibley keeps accounts also have been summoned to produce books and papers to show deposits made during the period indicated.

The officers of the Galena Signal Oil Company are Charles R. Miller, President; S. A. McGeath, and S. H. Payne, Vice Presidents; D. D. Mallory, Controller; F. H. Johnston, Secretary; E. H. Sibley, Treasurer.

The cases of Sibley, his secretary, and the four others charged with conspiring to debauch the electors of Warren County, came before Justice Perry at Warren this morning; hearings were waived by the defendants, and all were held for court. Mr. Sibley did not appear, a physician's certificate being produced to certify that he was confined to his home by illness.

WARREN, Penn., Aug. 26.—Waiving a hearing on informations charging them with conspiring to debauch the electors of Warren County, Joseph C. Sibley, who recently resigned as candidate for Congress on the Republican ticket in the Twenty-eighth Congressional District of this State, Frank R. Taylor of Franklin, Charles D. Crandall, George B. Munn, and D. H. Howard of this county, were held for court trial here to-day by Justice of the Peace H. S. Perry.

The proceedings occupied over an hour and a half. All the defendants were present except Mr. Sibley, who, according to a physician's certificate, was confined to his home in Franklin with acute heart trouble. Each of the other defendants was released on his own recognizance to get bail of $1,000.

BOY PERSECUTED, SHE SAYS.

Mrs. Vanderbilt Will Ask Mayor Gaynor to Intercede for Her Son.

When Mayor Gaynor resumes his duties he will be asked by Mrs. Hannah Vanderbilt of 854 Madison Street, Brooklyn, to intercede for her son, William Vanderbilt, 22 years old. She says his case resembles that of the boy Duffy, who charged the police with hounding him and for whom the Mayor acted.

Mrs. Vanderbilt declared yesterday that the police for four years have made the life of her son miserable and caused herself and his sister humiliation. Four years ago, the police say, the boy was arrested on a charge of disorderly conduct. Mrs. Vanderbilt says the charge was dismissed in court and the boy discharged, but ever since the police, particularly plain-clothes men, have trailed him.

Mrs. Vanderbilt learned that her son's photograph was in the Rogues' Gallery, and a week ago she called upon Police Commissioner Baker and demanded that it be removed. She was told the picture would be removed from the gallery if her son could satisfactorily explain why he had posed at different times under the alias "Frank Smith." She was told the boy associated with pickpockets, according to detectives.

Mrs. Vanderbilt denied that her son was the associate of pickpockets. She declared that if he assumed the name of Smith it was to save his mother and sister from humiliation when being persecuted by detectives.

Yesterday young Vanderbilt was arraigned in New Jersey Avenue Court by Detective Hoffman, who arrested him in front of his home Thursday evening, on a technical charge of vagrancy made by Frank L. Reichert of 563 Glenmore Avenue, who says he was robbed of $50 on a Long Island Railroad train last July. Mrs. Vanderbilt says the police prevailed on Reichert to make the charge. The boy was held for examination.

RENT PAYING EASY FOR "AUNT MARY"

Prizefight Onlookers Come to Her Aid When She's Dispossessed from Basement Rooms.

HER FRIENDS AS COLLECTORS

But First They Stand Her in the Light in Front of the National Athletic Club.

Landlord Kraak of the tenement house at 522 West Forty-fourth Street appeared there yesterday morning and, according to the tenants, demanded of Mrs. Mary Smith, who is 60 years old, and is known in the neighborhood as "Aunt Mary," the sum of $10, which Mrs. Smith owed Kraak for one month's rent of that part of the basement in which she made her home.

With the assistance of kind neighbors "Aunt Mary" was able to make up $6, but that was not enough, and the landlord accordingly had the old woman dispossessed. She was heartbroken at the time, but she was glad indeed later on that she and her sympathizers had been unable to obtain only $6, for had they succeeded in getting $4 more the story that follows would not have been written, at least not this month.

A few doors west of the tenement from which "Aunt Mary" was dispossessed is the Amsterdam Opera House, now the home of the National Athletic Club, an organization that provides pugilistic entertainment for those whose names are on its membership list at so much a member. The club holds at least one stag bout every week, and last night was the regular stag. When the time came for the club members to begin assembling old Mrs. Smith, surrounded by her earthly possessions, occupied practically all of the sidewalk space in front of 522 West Forty-fourth Street.

She was seated on the remnants of a cane-bottomed chair and around her stood a crowd of sympathizing neighbors, all of them mentally busy trying to figure out some way for "Aunt Mary" to get out of the predicament she was in. Every now and then "Aunt Mary," would shed a few tears, and the neighbors would crowd closer and tell her to be of good cheer.

"Maybe the paint ain't as black as it looks," said one.

"I hope not, for it's awful for an old creature sixty years and more to be out here in the cold with no hope in sight," sobbed the old woman.

The men who were congregating in the clubrooms nearby were too eager to get places by the ringside to stop to find out why all the furniture, not to mention "Aunt Mary," was in the roadway when they arrived at the battleground.

But it was different when they came out. While the preliminaries and the main bout were being fought two women who were among Mrs. Smith's friends thought of a plan. They were Mrs. Lipton and Mrs. Ellsworth, both next door neighbors.

"All these fight gentlemen are sports," Mrs. Lipton suggested, "and you know that sports are generous, and so when the fights are over and they come out we will stop them and tell them of the fix that poor old Mrs. Smith is in, and I'll bet you they'll help her."

Mrs. Ellsworth agreed with every word that Mrs. Lipton said. They hurriedly called into consultation the other neighbors, and made plain their plan. Each one was to have a certain station, and each was to explain to the first sport they collided with why all that furniture was in the street. "Aunt Mary" stood where the rays of the electric light would make it impossible for anybody to miss seeing her.

About 10:30 o'clock the stag ended and the crowd filed out. Among the first to appear were George Considine and Bob Vernon. Mrs. Ellsworth collared them near the spot where "Aunt Mary" was basking in the electric light. Briefly she told the story of the dispossession.

"That's too bad," said Considine, tears filling his eyes, and he handed out a $5 bill.

"Here's another fiver," said Vernon, in a choking voice.

"May Heaven bless ye both," said "Aunt Mary," who had witnessed the gifts.

Next appeared "Bob" Armstrong, the big negro pugilist who tried to train Jeffries into winning form for his fight with Johnson. A girl stopped him and told him about "Aunt Mary."

"Golly ain't dat a shame," said Armstrong, and thereupon he handed her a dollar bill and Mrs. Smith's rent was more than paid by that amount.

Charley White, the referee, sauntered along a moment later, and he donated a $2 bill, and Jack Cooper, who was with him, duplicated the gift.

In quick succession there passed, among many others, Dan McKettrick, Sol Manheim, "Dr." Partridge, Charley Watson, Lou Muslіner, Jimmy Johnson, in fact a whole platoon of sports, and all that had been on the winning side gave something to "Aunt Mary," the amounts varying from 25 cents to $5.

When the last had gone old Mrs. Smith's hand clutched a roll of banknotes that will pay her rent for a year or more, if necessary.

"We don't know how much it is yet, but it is a plenty," said Mrs. Ellsworth afterward.

"Sports sure are gentlemen," remarked "Aunt Mary" as she took a still tighter grip on her roll.

Mrs. Smith will take a new apartment in the neighborhood this morning, and it won't be in a basement.

OSTEOPATHS LOSE FIGHT.

Supreme Court Denies Their Right to Issue Death Certificates.

In their fight for official recognition the osteopaths met with another defeat yesterday when Supreme Court Justice Putnam in Brooklyn decided that the Board of Health was right in refusing a burial permit in cases where a regular physician had not been in attendance.

Since the Legislature passed a law recognizing the osteopaths in this State they have been fighting for the privilege of issuing death certificates. The courts have sustained their right to treat patients, but under a new section of the Sanitary Code the osteopaths have found a way to hamper them.

This section prohibits the granting of burial permits where patients have died under the care of an osteopath, and it was under this provision that the Board of Health filed a demurrer to their complaint. Justice Putnam sustained the demurrer. He said:

> While the State has allowed the practice of osteopathy, it does not allow one without practice in surgery or experience in prescribing drugs to certify to the cause of death.
>
> Granted that the theoretical education of the osteopath is of a standard equal to that of a doctor of medicine, his practice is restricted, so that it does not appear that he can make the tests by which alone many diseases can be certainly detected.

As the osteopaths have maintained that they will fight the issue to a finish it is likely that an appeal will be taken.

BOY DIES IN THE STREET.

Police Think He Was Run Over by His Father's Fruit Wagon.

Six-year-old Tony Arello, unconscious and with a deep gash in his head, was found dying in the gutter in front of his father's fruit and vegetable stand at 559 Second Avenue late yesterday afternoon. He died before the arrival of an ambulance surgeon, but when the police questioned Peter Arello, the father, he was unable to explain how the boy had received the fatal injury.

The fruit vendor's horse and wagon were at the curb, and although Patrolman Rooney of the East Thirty-fifth Street Station found blood upon one of the front wheels, the father was certain that his son had not been run over.

Arello explained that he had been to the market for a load of vegetables, and was transferring them to his cellar when he discovered the plight of the child. The police believe the boy was accidentally crushed under the wagon while the father's attention was distracted by his business.

PINCHOT PLACES BLAME FOR FIRES

Declares Men in Congress Who Oppose Forest Service Plans Are Responsible.

DEATH LIST IS GROWING

Now Put at 160—Plan to Fire Big Guns as Rainmakers Opposed by War Department.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 26.—Gifford Pinchot, the Forester deposed by President Taft, in a formal statement to-day laid at the doors of "men in Congress like Heyburn, Carter, and Mondell," blame for the disastrous fires that have swept the National forests and resulted in the death of more than 100 men. Mr. Mondell is Chairman of the House Committee on Public Lands, while Senator Heyburn is a member of the Committee on Conservation of National Resources. Mr. Carter, who is a Senator from Montana, is on no committee connected directly with forest preservation. The three men are all ironbound reactionaries.

These men, says Mr. Pinchot, have been fighting on the side of the fires. He does not directly connect their names with the terrible loss of life, but after blaming them by name for the present "calamity," he does declare that "the loss, suffering, and death these fires have caused," are wholly unnecessary. Mr. Pinchot's statement is a plea for further protection of the forest wealth of the country, and the greater safeguarding of lives of people living in the forest areas. The statement is in part as follows:

"I am proud of the splendid work the men of the Forest Service have been doing against the Western forest fires. Many of them have given their lives to protect the homes of settlers and the forests on which the prosperity of the Western people depend. To my mind their conduct is beyond all praise.

"The men in Congress like Heyburn, Carter, and Mondell, who have made light of the efforts of the Forest Service to prepare itself to prevent such a calamity as this, have, in effect, been fighting on the side of the fires against the general welfare.

"If even a small fraction of the loss from the present fires had been expended in additional patrol and preventive equipment some or perhaps all of the loss could have been avoided. I believe our people will take this lesson to heart, and insist that the settlers and their wives and children, the lumbermen and the miners, and the $2,000,000,000 worth of National property in the National forests shall be adequately protected.

"Forest fires are preventable. It is a good thing for us to remember at this time that nearly or quite all of the loss, suffering, and death these fires have caused is wholly unnecessary. A fire in the forest is the same kind of a thing as a fire in the city. There is only one way to fight either The Fire Department of every city is organized with the prime idea of getting to the fire when it is young.

"So with forest fires. The time to conquer them is before they grow strong. If a forest is equipped with roads, trails, telephones, and a reasonable number of men for patrol there is no more likelihood that great fires will be able to get started than there is that great conflagrations like the Chicago fire will get started in a city with a modern Fire Department. Under rare circumstances they may, but the chances are against it.

"The Forest Service has done wonders with its handful of devoted men. It has put out every year many thousands of small fires, any one of which might under favorable conditions have developed into a conflagration which 10,000 men could not stop. This year, because of the great drought, the worst in the Northwest for twenty years, there were too many fires and too few rangers.

"The lesson from these forest fires is perfectly clear. When a city suffers from a great fire it does not retrench in its Fire Department but strengthens it."

Mr. Pinchot is in Washington a few days preparatory to a trip West. There he will joint Mr. Roosevelt and James R. Garfield, and it is expected that the three champions of conservation will make some addresses from the same platform.

The reports received by Associate Forester Potter to-day concerning the situation in Oregon, which is the first report to come to the Forest Service in three days, states that one of the conflagrations is endangering the Bull Run Watershed, which furnishes the water supply to Portland.

Several Summer resorts in the surrounding mountains are said to be in danger, and the guests are fleeing for safety. At the request of Mr. Potter the War Department is considering the advisability of sending more troops to that district to aid the forest rangers. It is thought that at this time two companies of troops will meet the emergency.

WON'T TRY TO BRING RAIN.

War Department Declines to Try Experiment with Big Guns.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 26.—Estimating the cost of the experiment at about $100,000, the War Department officials to-day declined requests to order a bombardment of the skies by all its guns on Puget Sound and at the mouth of the Columbia River, in an effort to bring rain in the burning forest district of the Northwest. In addition to the objection of cost, the army officials regarded the proposals as certain to prove futile. The Navy Department, to which a similar request was made, expressed its willingness to co-operate with the army with six or ten guns, the only ones at its disposal.

The experiment would have been one of the most spectacular ever attempted in the United States. Around Puget Sound, at Forts Worden, Casey, and Flagler, the army has 40 twelve-inch mortars, 6 twelve-inch rifles, 18 ten-inch guns, and 20 six-inch guns, besides a large number of guns of smaller calibre. At the mouth of the Columbia, in Forts Columbia and Stevens, are 8 twelve-inch mortars, 8 ten-inch guns, 3 eight-inch guns, and 11 six-inch guns, in addition to the smaller ones.

To fire these once simultaneously, loaded properly for the purpose in mind, would have cost the Government, it was estimated at the War Department, $10,000. Admitting the possibility of effectiveness, it was considered that probably ten rounds would have been required. This would have run the cost up to a figure that the officials did not feel justified in incurring without specific authorization from higher authority, particularly in view of the amount already spent in putting thirty-two companies of troops into the forest to fight the fires.

Besides the element of cost, it was stated at the War Department that the army was not equipped with projectiles with time fuses for the guns just enumerated, and hence the only atmospheric disturbance created would be by the formation of gases on the ground at the time of the discharge of the guns and by the passage of the projectile through the air. The disturbance caused by the flight of the projectiles it was said, would be comparatively negligible for the purposes of creating a violent confusion among the air currents.

To fire the biggest guns in the coast artillery costs about $250 each, it has been estimated. To fire the twelve-inch mortars costs about $60 or $70 each.

DEATH LIST PUT AT 160.

Towns in Montana and Idaho Are Now Out of Danger.

SPOKANE, Wash., Aug. 26.—Following is a revised list of the number killed in the Idaho, Montana, and Washington forest fires last Saturday and Sunday:

United States forest employes, Idaho and Montana	100
Settlers and fire fighters, St. Joe Valley, Idaho	50
At Newport, Wash.	4
At Wallace, Idaho	3
At Mullan and Spokane	3
Total	160

Of Ranger Hollingshead's sixty men on Big Creek fourteen bodies have been found and the other men are missing. Of sixty men on Setzer Creek, forty-eight bodies have been found and five men are missing. These sixty-two deaths of forest employes, added to the twenty-one deaths at the Bullion mine and on the Big Fork of the Coeur d'Alene, and the deaths in Montana and the various Idaho creeks, would bring the total number of deaths in the service up to 100.

Reports received to-day by District Forester Greely from the fire district in Montana and Idaho are that all towns are now out of danger.

Tragic stories are told by arrivals from the fire zone in Idaho. George Ryan of Toronto, Canada, one of the thirty men imprisoned in War Eagle Mine on Saturday, to-day told how six perished. He said:

"There were seventy-five of us under Ranger Pulaski. We first took refuge in the tunnel of the J. I. C. Mine, but it was not safe, and thirty of us went down the creek a quarter of a mile to the War Eagle. I don't know what became of the rest of the men.

"We tried to block up the entrance of the tunnel with blankets, but the fire burned them off as fast as we put them up.

"The flames swept over the mouth like a blast. The smoke was suffocating. About an hour and a half after we had been in the tunnel, Pulaski, who was nearest the mouth, lost consciousness.

"Two men who got scared rolled around in the middle of the tunnel instead of keeping by the edge on the floor, and they died across my knees.

"Nearly all of us during six hours were lying in water that dripped from the roof and walls of the tunnel.

"When the fire finally passed and the tunnel cleared a little nearly half of us were unconscious. The eyes of the others were gummed together from smoke and tears so that we could hardly open them. Five were dead.

"We found a sixth man, burned to a crisp, a short distance up the creek from the tunnel. Our two horses were nearly suffocated. Their eyes were falling out of their heads. We had to shoot them."

George Riberston, owner of a mine on Placer Creek, to-day said that the number of dead would never be known. He continued:

"Harvey Bertram, a deputy ranger, had much difficulty in holding his half-crazed men. Believing that they were trapped one or two of his party threatened to commit suicide. At times Bertram was able to control them only at the point of a revolver."

SAID RAWN WAS BRIBED.

Dead Man's Name Dragged Into Illinois Central Fraud Case.

CHICAGO, Aug. 26.—Frank B. Harriman, formerly general manager of the Illinois Central Railroad; John M. Taylor, formerly storekeeper for the same company, and Charles L. Ewing, once Superintendent of the Illinois Central lines north of the Ohio River, to-day were placed on trial in Judge Bruggemeyer's division of the Municipal Court on a charge of conspiracy to defraud the railroad company of sums said to total more than $1,000,000 through inflated car repair bills.

Despite objections by attorneys for the defense the names of Ira G. Rawn, formerly Vice President of the Illinois Central, and later President of the Monon Route, who met death recently by a bullet wound; J. M. Buker, and William Renshaw, formerly Superintendents of Machinery for the Illinois Central, were brought into the case in the testimony of Theophile Reuther, general manager of the Osterman Car Company, but now a locomotive engineer for the Illinois Central Railroad. His testimony, Judge Bruggemeyer asserted, might be stricken out later if not proved material.

Reuther testified as to the organization of the Osterman Company, a Chicago concern to which the Illinois Central cars were sent for repairs. He declared he had been ousted from his position as general manager and director that John M. Taylor, one of the defendants, might be made director. He declared the company was organized in 1906 to make grain doors, that it later made cement blocks, and subsequently entered the business of repairing cars for the Illinois Central.

Reuther declared that Osterman had told him of presenting Taylor with 2,000 shares of the Osterman Company stock, adding that he would give a similar block to Ira G. Rawn, at that time Vice President of the road; Frank B. Harriman, J. E. Buker, Assistant Superintendent of Machinery, and to William Renshaw, Superintendent of Machinery of the Illinois Central.

In response to objections the court ruled that this testimony might be stricken out if the prosecution failed to prove that Taylor had aided in sending material to the car concern.

Reuther, continuing his narrative, said: "One day I was walking through the yards with Osterman when we came upon a huge pile of lumber. He said that the lumber was worth at least $15,000, and said he would get the money to pay for it. A while later we came upon many tiers of brass journals and other brass car parts. He said, 'There's some easy money.' I said he had better look out for that easy money business or he would get into trouble. Osterman replied, 'Oh, Taylor will take care of that.'"

The directors are Thomas Clark, Adam Kloepfel, Emma Kloepfel of Brooklyn, and William S. Simpson, Myrtle Simpson, Henry Barker, Eliza Jane Barker of New York.

HUMOROUS BURGLAR CAUGHT AFTER FIGHT

Robber Who Left Notes to His Victims Proves to be Youth of 22 Years.

TRIES TO KILL HIS CAPTOR

Jumps Twenty Feet from Railroad Bridge and Empties His Revolver at a Policeman.

The burglar who has entered a dozen or more homes in the Bronx recently leaving humorous notes addressed to his victims, has been caught at last according to the police, and yesterday was held by Magistrate Krotel in the Morrisania Court for examination on a charge of burglary.

The man, who, the police say, admitted he was the much-sought burglar, is a youth of only 22 years, yet the police said that on July 22 he was released from the Elmira Reformatory, and that prior he had been in the House of Refuge and in the Catholic Protectory. He is beardless, light in weight, and says that he is a carpenter.

George Wright is the name that the young man gave, and he said he has been occupying a furnished room in West Street. He was arrested early yesterday morning in Van Ness, a locality where many burglaries had taken place recently, by Policeman William Burke.

It was about daybreak when Burke caught sight of Wright. Burke was on a bridge over the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, between Van Ness and Unionport. When Wright came along the policeman hailed him.

"I'm on my way home from a party," Wright told him.

"Where do you live?" Burke asked, and he said Wright replied:

"At 51 Benedict Avenue."

The apartment house at 51 Benedict Avenue is where Burke happens to live, and he made a leap toward the young man, who started to run. Burke caught the youth before he got off the bridge, but as he was about to place him under arrest he said, Wright drew a revolver and fired at him. The bullet missed him, and an instant later Wright grappled with him. The policeman, taken off his guard, was thrown heavily, and Wright vaulted over the bridge rail to the railroad tracks, twenty feet below, and ran.

Burke sprang to his feet, and, drawing his revolver, fired two shots after the fugitive. Then he leaped over the bridge rail himself, landed on his feet, and started the chase again. Wright fired twice at him as he ran, and the policeman returned the shots, but the bullets of neither hit the other. Another exchange of shots, equally harmless, emptied both revolvers, and before Wright could reload the policeman had overtaken him.

Burke grappled with the man, and this time hurled him to the ground. Wright's head struck one of the rails, and he was stunned for an instant. When he recovered Burke had placed handcuffs upon him. Then only did he give up the fight and accompany Burke to the Westchester Station House.

In his pockets the police said were a gold watch, chain, a gold scarf pin, two pawn tickets for jewelry, a screwdriver and chisel combined and 17 cents. Detectives went to the pawnshops and returned with other articles of jewelry which, the police said, were identified by persons whose homes had been robbed recently.

In the Morrisania Court Wright waived examination and was locked up. The police had three witnesses ready to appear against the young man. These were Annie Decker of 1,637 Parker Avenue, Stewart Hemphill, 1,341 Pugsley Avenue, and Raymond Hammill, 1,876 Geurkin Street, all of the Bronx.

Miss Decker, who is only 17 years old, said she had been awakened last Sunday morning by Wright entering her room. He placed his hand over her mouth, threatened her with his revolver, she said, and prevented her from calling for help until he had left the house.

Hemphill said his house was robbed on Thursday morning. He had been awakened by the crying of his baby, and stepped on the burglar's hand protruding from beneath the bed where he had hidden. The burglar had a revolver, and by threatening to shoot, Mrs. Hemphill made her husband stand aside while he hurried from the house. He got away with a gold watch and chain and this jewelry Hemphill identified in the lot found on the burglar.

Raymond Hammill was robbed some time ago. The police said he identified a cap worn by Wright yesterday as stolen from him.

Richard Kerwin, 1,351 Pugsley Avenue, received a visit from the burglar recently, and discovered after the intruder's departure this note:

> The lunch was very nice. The baby might be very hungry, so I will leave $1.

Kerwin found that the man had raided the icebox, and had taken $30 in cash. In another case the burglar left a note saying:

"You have a large family and we feel sorry for you. We leave everything as we found it."

EMBEZZLER ASKS DELAY.

Broker Who Blamed "Wall St. Svengali" for His Thefts Given Time to See Lawyer.

Alfred J. Connolly of 731 Carroll Street, Brooklyn, who says he was hypnotized by a "Wall Street Svengali," whom he blames for his peculations from C. D. Morgan & Co., a brokerage firm of 20 Broad Street, of which he was Secretary, was before Magistrate Cornell in the Tombs Court yesterday, charged with grand larceny, the complainant specifying a $26 check which he is alleged to have forged.

"Is that the only amount involved?" asked Magistrate Cornell.

"He has already confessed to the larceny of $3,200," answered Detective Flood.

The prisoner asked that he be given until to-day to communicate with his lawyer, J. J. Vause of 15 Broad Street, and he was held. After the hearing the prisoner refused to make a statement about the case except this:

"I guess I'm in Dutch."

J. J. Bamberger owned two shares of stock in the corporation of C. D. Morgan & Co. James T. Haviland owned twenty-two, but after Bamberger returned from England several months ago, he had a wordy war with Haviland and agreed to buy Haviland's stock for $5,000, and, according to the District Attorney's office, paid $1,000 and gave notes for $4,000. Haviland told the District Attorney on Wednesday he thought the firm was being robbed, and Connolly's arrest followed on Friday. Bamberger was not present at the time.

Connolly confessed to the District Attorney, saying he seemed to be under a fell influence and with out reason turned over to Bamberger stocks and certificates belonging to customers, although he knew that they did not belong to Bamberger. He said he gave Bamberger at one time 71 shares of January oil stock.

At another time, Connolly said, Bamberger told him C. D. Morgan & Co. was indebted to C. A. Stone & Co., whereupon he made out a check for the amount Bamberger mentioned and gave it to Bamberger, knowing at the time his firm didn't owe C. A. Stone & Co. anything. From time to time, he declared, at Bamberger's request he tore up checks that were returned to the office.

Assistant District Attorneys Du Vivier and Lavelle said yesterday they had not had time enough to discover how much truth there was in Connolly's confession. The District Attorney's office is at work on the case, and it is expected it will be ready for presentation to the Grand Jury next Monday. Levelle and Du Vivier believe the secretary's peculations will aggregate $15,000.

Bamberger traded in mine stocks, sightseeing boats, and moving picture theatres in New York up to three years ago, when he went to London.

GAYNOR MAY GO HOME.

Mayor Will Leave Hospital in Three Days—Reads and Jokes.

"There is no truth whatever in the rumor that Mayor Gaynor is to leave the hospital in forty-eight hours," said Robert Adamson last night, in answer to the report that said he was to leave for St. James. None of the Mayor's effects has been removed, and it has not been decided where he will go when he leaves the hospital, which will be in about three days. Mr. Gaynor seems to favor the Adirondack Mountains, but he might go to St. James, said Secretary Adamson.

There was a great deal of activity at the hospital all yesterday afternoon, as many called to see the Mayor. City Chamberlain Hyde had a long talk with him in the afternoon, and soon after Dr. Stewart and Dr. Dowd called. They only remained with the Mayor for a short time, however, and said that it had not been decided when they would operate, but that it would not be for some time. They said that the Mayor was feeling well and sat up most of the day, joking with his attendant and reading.

Many friends have offered their yachts and Summer homes to the Mayor to recuperate in, but it is very doubtful that he will accept any of these offers. Congressman Fitzgerald of Brooklyn and Street Commissioner Edwards were among yesterday's callers. They did not see the Mayor, however, and appeared to be much disappointed.

GIRL AND FIANCE DROWN.

Clasped to Each Other, New York Pair Sink in Lake from Upset Boat.

NEW PRESTON, Conn., Aug. 26.—S. D. Valentine of Jefferson Avenue, Brooklyn, and his fiance, Miss Louella Moore of 1 West Sixty-eighth Street, Manhattan, were drowned in Lake Waramaug this afternoon. Mrs. Umbach, an aunt of the young lady, was rescued. The boat in which the party were out for a row was upset. The bodies were recovered a short time after the accident.

Mr. Valentine had been a guest at a hotel here for several days and was entertaining Miss Moore and Mrs. Umbach. Their boat was at the southerly end of the lake when one of the ladies dropped something overboard. In reaching for this the boat was upset. The wind was blowing and the surface of the lake was rough.

Mr. Valentine and Miss Moore went down clasped in each other's arms. Mrs. Umbach was rescued by Prof. Alvin C. Burnham of Brooklyn, who was fishing about 100 yards from where the boat was upset. Prof. Burnham says that Valentine's oar slipped out of the oarlock and the oarsman went over backward into the water. Mrs. Umbach was able to seize the gunwale of the boat, but the others went down before any one of several boats near at hand could reach them.

Miss Moore was 26 years of age, and Mr. Valentine about 30.

Mr. Valentine was a salesman for a New York metal ceiling company. He was a Quartermaster in the Thirteenth Regiment, N. G. N. Y., and a member of Stella Lodge, F. and A. M.

Miss Moore was the daughter of the late Alexander Moore, founder of the building firm of Alexander Moore & Sons, and a sister of William J. Moore, who is well known in insurance and Masonic circles.

BABY GIRL MISSING.

Woman Lodger Tells Child's Mother That a Man Took Her.

The police were requested yesterday by Mrs. Margaret Walsh of 460 West Forty-second Street to search for her three-year-old daughter, Nellie, who disappeared on Thursday morning while in charge of a woman who boards with Mrs. Walsh. The woman is also missing.

Mrs. Walsh said that she is separated from her husband and works every day to support herself and child. When she went out on Thursday she turned the child over to her lodger, who is an old woman, and asked her to take the little girl for an airing. Upon returning home in the evening Mrs. Walsh did not find the child about, and upon inquiring of the older woman what had become of her was told that she had met a man whom she asked to take the little girl home. Mrs. Walsh's lodger went out yesterday morning and did not return.

Mrs. Walsh said her daughter weighs forty pounds, is 3 feet 3 inches in height, and has blue eyes, light complexion and hair, and wears a white frock and tan buttoned shoes.

DOG JUMPS FOUR FLOORS.

Children Flee as It Falls from Fire Escape After Terrorizing Tenement.

Growling and whining a large English setter ran at two women at Driggs Avenue and North Eighth Street, Brooklyn, last evening, and snapped at their skirts. The women screamed and climbed on the rear step of an ice wagon.

The dog then turned into North Eighth Street, scattering factory workers, and darted into a tenement at 180 North Eighth Street. Women and children ran to their rooms as the dog scampered up to the flat of William Ford on the fourth floor. Mrs. Ford locked herself in a bedroom as the dog rushed into the kitchen.

The dog climbed out upon the fire escape and looked down into the rear yard where ten children were playing. Tenants called to them to run to safety, and they hurried into the cellar, closing the door just as the dog leaped from the fire escape. It landed unhurt, but Ford, rushing out with an axe, brained him.

MRS. FRENCH STARTS SUIT AGAINST HEINZE

Forced to, She Says, Because He Refuses to Give Up Her 5,000 Mining Shares.

GIVES OUT LOVE LETTERS

But She Is Not at All Concerned About His Engagement to Bernice Henderson, Actress.

Mrs. Lillian Hobart French, who for twelve years was a friend of Fritz Augustus Heinze, notified her lawyers yesterday to begin suit against him at once for the recovery of 5,000 shares of Silver King Coalition stock. Following her conference with them she gave out for publication love letters addressed to her by Mr. Heinze, and told of how she tried to console him while the market was crushing his financial ventures in the panic months of 1907, and of his abandonment of her to wed Mrs. Bernice Golden Henderson, the actress, to whom his engagement was announced on Tuesday.

Mrs. French was angered by Mr. Heinze's reference to her as "that type of woman" in a published interview. She said it was to vindicate herself from that reference that she gave out the love letters, and detailed more specifically her twelve years of friendship with him.

"That type of woman, indeed!" she remarked as she ran through a large package of letters, selecting those which contained the names of no third parties.

"And what did I ever do except to give up everything I ever had, and ever hope to have, to F. Augustus Heinze? Oh, I am telling the truth in this matter. I have not even tried to spare myself, nor shield myself, so that what I say may be the whole truth.

"I want you to know that Mr. Heinze has forced me every foot of the way I have gone in this matter. If he was down and out to-day, and penniless he knows and I know who would be the first person in the world to rush to his side and give him sympathy and comfort.

"But he shall not leave me penniless while he goes with cash in pocket and enjoying every luxury in a European honeymoon. That is he shall not do it while he has in his possession securities that are my rightful property which I handed over to him when he was backed against the wall, and needed every resource he could lay his hands upon to fight his way out.

"That was when he was facing prison doors. I knew the chances I was taking. If he went to prison I was to lose, and I was willing to lose. But he did not go to prison and he recovered his financial bearings.

"With his marriage I have no concern. But this Silver King stock. It made me $300 per month. When Mr. Heinze was kind to me he brought me goods so that I should be provided for in times of trouble. There was $10,000 in cash and the Silver King stock. The stock paid great dividends then—15 per cent quarterly. It brought me in $300 every month.

"My business arrangement with Mr. Heinze when he took it back—when I gave it to him to help him out of his serious trouble—was that he would pay me $300 per month while he kept the stock and enjoyed its use. And he kept the terms of that promise until last June. When his trip to Europe was announced right after that, I went to his office to see about my $300, which was due. I could not get it.

"Tuesday last I went to his office to see him. I did not know about his engagement, but the morning papers, which I had not seen, told of it. I went to see about my income. He said he would not see me alone, but that I'd have to talk to him before his secretary and others, as there was nothing he cared to say to me alone, since he was soon to be married.

"'Who to?' I asked, and he replied: 'To Bernice Henderson.' I said, 'All right, Heinze; it's none of my business, but why did you go to Europe without providing for me—without arranging for the payment of my $300 a month?' And then it was he said the things that I cannot forgive.

"'I did not arrange for paying you,' he answered, 'because I didn't want to pay you. I did it deliberately.' I realized then I was being thrown over. I had a legal claim upon the securities which had produced my income. It was a hold upon a man who could refer to me under the circumstances as 'that type of a woman.'

"Heinze told me finally he would give me $150 a month. But he said I must write him for it each month, and would not get a cent of it without doing that. Think of it—me write him while he was on his honeymoon in Europe for the income that he would never have had in his possession if I hadn't seen him cornered and helped him fight to cover!"

Mr. Heinze refused to answer questions about the case or to express further his opinion upon it yesterday. Mrs. French waited in her apartment at the Imperial Arms, Riverside Drive and 138th Street, through the afternoon, hoping that he would come to her and make peace. But he did not come, and in the evening she talked further about him. She talked of the panic and of the way she nursed him through it after he had "paced the floor all night, cursing Morse and Barney for selling him out by throwing his securities on to the distracted market."

"That $10,000 Mr. Heinze gave me when he provided me with the Silver King securities," she said, "I invested in Wall Street and lost it all. I invested in Mr. Heinze's stocks and my shares went with the others."

Mrs. French exhibited an array of letters, "My Dear Little Girl," or "Dear Little Puss" was the usual salutation, and the conclusions offered "lots of love and a kiss."

From Hot Springs, Ark., he wrote:

> I received a letter from Miles O'Brien saying he had obtained your pledges from the pawnshop, and he told me that if I wished he would be very glad to buy the necklace from me for principal and interest. Keep a stiff upper lip and then things won't look so black.

At the offices of McMillan & Hewitt, Mrs. French's lawyers, Lawyer McMillan said he was in possession of telegrams from Mr. Heinze indicating Mrs. French's ownership of the Silver King stock, and that he had process servers out trying to reach Mr. Heinze.

QUALEY AND CORBETT BAILED

Promoters Again Indicted on Complaint of Kressler, Who Lost $3,000.

John A. Qualey and Harvey Wiley Corbett, who were indicted several days ago on the charge of the larceny of $35,000 from Mrs. Mary Nevins Bull through transactions in the Magnesia Asbestos Company, were named in an additional indictment handed down yesterday in which they are charged with the larceny of $3,000 from Leo Kressler, who was for two weeks superintending engineer of the Newark plant of the company at $50 a week.

It is alleged that Kressler agreed, in consideration of his position, to invest $5,000 in the plant, but he discovered after he had paid in $3,000 that his salary was coming out of his own money, and he refused to pay in any more. The first count of the indictment charges that Qualey and Corbett obtained $1,000 from Kressler through false representations on July 28, 1909, and the second count that they got $2,000 in the same manner on Aug. 10, 1909. Kressler brought suit against Qualey and Corbett, but the case never came to trial.

Qualey and Corbett were released by Judge O'Sullivan of General Sessions after the indictment in Mrs. Bull's case several days ago on the promise that they would appear and furnish the $15,000 bail. Corbett appeared early yesterday with the bail. Judge O'Sullivan issued a bench warrant for Qualey. In the afternoon John F. McIntyre, Qualey's lawyer, located his client and hurried him to court, where he gave the required bail.

A process server appeared at General Sessions yesterday afternoon to serve papers on Qualey in contempt proceedings in the City Court, following a judgment against him by a firm of photographers who had taken pictures of his Newark plant. The process server was told that Judge O'Sullivan didn't like this kind of invasion of his court, and he postponed his business with Qualey until Monday.

HAMMERSTEIN'S DINNER BILL.

Philadelphia Taxpayer Sues to Stop the City Paying for It.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 26.—Who is going to pay for the dinner for Oscar Hammerstein which was given to that impresario by the "Citizens of Philadelphia" on Feb. 10, 1909? is a question which will presently be up to the Philadelphia courts to decide. Rudolph Blankenburg, a tax payer, began suit yesterday to restrain the city from paying a bill of $1,434 for the dinner, which was given at the Bellevue-Stratford.

Mr. Blankenburg asserts that the subscribers to the dinner are responsible for the cost of the function, and that the appropriation made by the Councils to pay for it is illegal because several of the members of the Select and Common Councils who participated in the dinner, and therefore had an interest in the legislation, had no right to vote for the ordinance providing for the settlement of the bill.

In regard to the liability for payment of the dinner the claim is made in the petition that subscriptions to the dinner at the rate of $10 a cover were solicited by a self-constituted committee and signed with the names of John E. Reyburn, Chairman; Edwin S. Stuart, Charles C. Harrison, Alba B. Johnson, Randal Morgan, Ellis A. Gimbel, Isaac H. Clothier, Jr., and Finley Acker.

Just what the trouble is is not made clear. Either the dinner cost a great deal more than was planned or else some of the Philadelphia citizens forgot to pay their assessments. In any case the members of the Council who attended the dinner voted that the deficit be paid by a city appropriation.

The defendants in the suit are the City of Philadelphia, Mayor Reyburn, Controller Walton, City Treasurer Dobbins, and George C. Boldt, and Lawrence McCormick, owners of the Bellevue-Stratford.

The dinner is said to have been a very good one.

SOUGHT HUSBAND FIVE YEARS

Mrs. Deshuwitz Has Him Arrested for Deserting Her in Russia.

After seeking her husband, Louis, a tailor, for five years Mrs. Gussie Deshuwitz of 7 Elizabeth Street found him last night, and created such a disturbance that both were arrested on charges of disorderly conduct at Avenue B and Fourth Street.

In the Night Court the woman told Magistrate House that Deshuwitz, after marrying her in Odessa in 1904, left her a year later. Leaving her child with relatives she searched for him through Europe, helped on her way by various Jewish societies. She found no trace of him until friends in this city wrote that they had seen him here with another woman.

On Aug. 10 she came to this country, and searched the streets of the east side for him ever since. She saw him last night and caught hold of him, scuffling with him until a policeman arrested them both.

Deshuwitz admitted he had left her, saying that he had found a woman more to his liking here.

"Let me go, Judge," he said, "and I won't trouble her again."

"Indeed I shall not," exclaimed Magistrate House. "I cannot take a charge of abandonment here, but I shall hold you for trial in the Yorkville Court tomorrow morning."

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., Aug. 26.—Theodore Churchill, aged 37, walked off a New York Central passenger train in his sleep late last night. His arm was so badly crushed that it had to be amputated at Vassar Hospital in this city to-day. Churchill died from shock.

MADRIZ MUST LEAVE HONDURAN REFUGE

Told to Move on from Island Near Nicaraguan Coast, Washington Is Informed.

NOT INVITED TO MEXICO

So Mexican Charge d'Affaires Says, but There Will Be No Attempt to Bar Him Out.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 26.—Honduras has officially invited Dr. Madriz, the deposed President of the Nicaraguan Government at Managua, to move on, according to information received at the State Department to-day from its diplomatic representatives. This accounts for the announcement that Madriz, who fled from Nicaragua to Amapala on a little Honduran island, in the Bay of Fonseca, quite close to the Nicaraguan coast, is to leave on Monday for Mexico. It also explains the departure from Honduras to Costa Rica of the Generals who fled with Madriz to Amapala.

The request of Honduras was based on an article in the Washington convention to which the Central American republics were signatories. In that treaty it was provided specifically that the leaders of a faction in one country should not be permitted to take refuge in a department of another country, which borders on the republic in which there was factional trouble.

Amapala is situated in a department bordering on Nicaragua, and while there is not known to have been any movement on the part of the Madriz faction to make Amapala a base of possible operations against Estrada, yet Honduras decided, according to dispatches received in Washington, to conform precisely with the provisions of the treaty. The action has excited all the more comment in Washington because of the close relations of Zelaya, the former Nicaraguan President, to the present Honduran Government and to Dr. Madriz.

The United States is understood to be indifferent as to the whereabouts of Madriz so long as no further strife is stirred up in Nicaragua, and opportunity is given for the organization of a permanent Nicaraguan Government. The State Department expects Gen. Estrada to undertake this work immediately.

The reported protest of Gen. Estrada to the landing of arms and ammunition of the Madriz gunboat Venus in Costa Rican territory, and her subsequent sale, has not reached the State Department. Madriz is not going to Mexico at the invitation of that country, according to Chargé d'Affaires Ricoy of the Mexican Embassy.

"I think the Mexican Government has not invited Madriz to come to Mexico," he said. "But as far as I am able to see there is no reason why the Mexican Government should prevent Dr. Madriz from landing there, particularly when the presence of the Nicaraguan in any of the Central American republics might be a disturbing element."

Señor Ricoy explained that the departure of Bartolomeo Carbajary Rosas, Mexican Minister at Nicaragua, from Managua for Costa Rica, where he is also accredited, was due merely to the fact that the Mexican Government has not yet recognized the Estrada faction as the Government of Nicaragua. He said that the departure was not meant to show hostility to the Estrada cause.

ESTRADA DEPOSES BROTHER.

Sends Orders to Chamorro to Take Over Post of Acting President.

MANAGUA, Aug. 26.—Gen. Emiliano Chamorro, one of Juan Estrada's chief lieutenants and a spectacular figure in the revolution, will relieve José Dolores Estrada as Acting President, and occupy the office of Chief Executive of the republic until Gen. Estrada arrives at the capital prepared to take up the reins of government.

This fact was made known to-day when the Peace Commission brought to Managua the following letter, dated Aug. 23, addressed to Acting President Estrada and signed by Gens. Chamorro, Mena, and Macis:

> The Peace Commission has placed in our hands a proclamation in which you recognize the Provisional Government presided over by Gen. Juan Estrada and proclaimed Oct. 10 of last year. We have advised President Estrada of the said decree, and he has ordered the power of Government turned over to Gen. Chamorro, who will exercise the same until Gen. Estrada arrives in Managua.
>
> In consequence of said order the Executive Delegate will come to Managua, his object being to exercise the power which you now hold and act as Commander in Chief.
>
> Regarding a free election for President of the republic within six months, Gen. Estrada and ourselves accept this clause of your proclamation, it being a part of our programme.

Gen. Chamorro met the peace commissioners at Granada and while there received a telegram from Gen. Estrada at Acoyapa saying that he had sent a message to José Dolores Estrada, that Gen. Chamorro would act as executive delegate until Juan Estrada himself could reach Managua.

ABRUZZI MATCH AGAIN.

Report of Meeting in Paris to Arrange It—Elkins Says He's Not Going.

PARIS, Aug. 26.—Special dispatches from Italy insist, in spite of all denials, that the marriage of Miss Katherine Elkins to the Duke of the Abruzzi has been decided upon and that Senator Elkins and the affianced couple will soon arrive in Paris to arrange the details of the wedding.

Both the Queen Mother of Italy and King Victor Emanuel have, according to these reports, given their consent to the wedding.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 26.—The latest report concerning the romance of Miss Katherine Elkins and the Duke of the Abruzzi was to-day read to Senator Elkins, who was reached by long distance telephone at Elkins, West Va. He said: "I am going to remain in West Virginia for the next six months and have no intention of going abroad. I know nothing of the Paris report. I know want to be bothered any more about the matter."

HARVEST QUEEN BURNED.

Big Windjammer Found Sinking by German Steamer—Crew Saved.

BREMEN, Aug. 26.—A dispatch from Fayal, Azores Islands, to the North German Lloyd Company reports that the North German Lloyd steamer Koenigin Luise encountered on Aug. 24 the ship Harvest Queen of Windsor, N. S., which sailed from Dalhousie, N. B., Aug. 10 for Buenos Ayres, in a sinking condition, the ship being then in longitude 40.51 west and in latitude 44.24 north. All the crew of the Harvest Queen were taken aboard the Koenigin Luise, and the ship was left burning in midocean, having been set afire to prevent her becoming a menace to navigation.

The ship Harvest Queen, which was set on fire and abandoned in midocean, was one of the largest wooden square-rigged vessels in existence, and almost the last of the once great fleet of Nova Scotia windjammers. The Harvest Queen was built at Cornwallis, N. S., in 1887, for a syndicate headed by C. R. Burgess. She registered 2,041 tons gross and 1,894 net. Her commander, Capt. Forsyth, has a crew of twenty-two men.

NUNCIO SEEKS KING.

Vatican's Envoy Asks for Interview with Alfonso of Spain.

MADRID, Aug. 26.—Mgr. Vico, the Papal Nuncio at the Spanish court, to-day applied for an interview with King Alfonso. No statement of the purpose of the interview is made, but it is suggested that the representative of the Vatican desires to take up personally with the King the subjects of the conflict between the Spanish Government and the Vatican.

Gen. Aldan was to-day appointed Captain-General of the Spanish troops at Melilla, Morocco, to replace Gen. Marina, who has resigned. Gen. Sanchez Gomez was named Chief of the Military Household of the King to replace Lieut. Gen. Echague, Count of Serrallo. According to the A. B. C. both Generals have refused to accept the appointments and have requested to be retired.

ROME, Aug. 26.—Cardinal Merry del Val, the Papal Secretary of State, came to Rome this morning from his Summer residence at the Villa Monte Mario for a reception of the diplomatic corps. Among those who attended was the Marquis de Gonzalez, in charge of the Spanish Embassy at the Vatican since the recall of the Ambassador, Marquis de Ojeda. Gonzalez's audience was longer than usual.

It is reported that the conversation of the Spanish representative with the Cardinal was cordial, although Cardinal Merry del Val confirmed the details of the last note communicated to Spain, which maintains unchanged the attitude and policy of the Holy See, without making a step either forward or backward. The note asserts that if Premier Canalejas persists in maintaining his position, the conflict will be left in statu quo, the Spanish Catholics being left to decide between the rights of the church and the policy of the Government.

Marqis de Gonzalez declared that he had received no further instructions from Madrid since communicating to his Government the note of the Vatican.

A KING FOR MONTENEGRO.

Prince Nicholas Assumes Royal Title To-morrow with Much Pomp.

CETTINJE, Montenegro, Aug. 26.—The little principality of Montenegro, which by the elevation of Bulgaria to sovereign rank in 1908 was left the sole Balkan State not enjoying the title of kingdom, will join its sister States Aug. 28, when the principality will be declared a kingdom, and Prince Nicholas, its ruler, will take the title of King of Montenegro, and for the first time in his life receive the royal salute of 101 guns.

Strange scenes are now being witnessed in the picturesque little capital of the "land of the black mountain," the accommodations of which are inadequate to house one-tenth of the visitors coming to attend the festivities accompanying the Montenegrin jubilee, which opens on the same date. Wooden barracks and tents, hastily erected, will have to satisfy most of the visitors to Cettinje, but the provision of sufficient food for the visitors and inhabitants during the festivities is an even more serious question.

The municipality has appointed a special committee, which has been sent out to raid the mountain regions in this vicinity and collect from the inhabitants cattle and sheep to feed the multitude of visitors. In order to prevent a ruthless exploitation of foreigners attracted by the ceremonies, the Government has fixed a tariff at which all provisions and drinks must be sold.

GENERAL SEAMEN'S STRIKE.

Delegates from Seamen's Unions Agree to Plan of International Action.

COPENHAGEN, Aug. 26.—Delegates from all the Seamen's Unions of America and Europe, represented at the International Congress of Sailors and Marine Firemen, in session here, with the exception of the French association, agreed this morning to declare an international strike unless the shipowners of every country concerned agree to the formation of a board of conciliation to deal with the grievances of the men. The proposal for the strike has been the subject of he ted discussions at the congress, the delegates of several of the Continental countries having opposed the suggestion of the British Union for a strike.

The strike resolution was laid before the full convention later in the afternoon and adopted. The convention also approved a resolution for the formation of an International Seamen's Union, which was the subject of a heated discussion yesterday.

In the discussion before the congress a date two to three months hence was given as the time at which the strike will probably be called unless the grievances with the employers are adjusted. The exact date, however, will be known only to the leaders of the International Congress, who are pledged to secrecy on this point.

ALLEGED FORGER CAPTURED.

Deposited Certified Checks in Toronto —One Repudiated by Newburg Bank.

TORONTO, Ont., Aug. 26.—A man who gave his name as John Bagley of Boise City, Idaho, but believed to be Charles Knightly of New York, was arrested here late last night charged with obtaining from a local firm $700 worth of jewelry by false pretenses and with uttering a forged check for $2,000 on the Toronto Bank of Commerce. According to the authorities he is wanted in Boston and Peekskill, N. Y., for alleged forgeries.

Bagley deposited in the Toronto Bank of Commerce yesterday two checks. One was for $1,000 on the Newburg National Bank of New York, and the other for $1,600 on the Fishkill Bank of New York. Both were apparently certified. The Newburg Bank replied to an inquiry that the check had not been certified. In Bagley's effects were found many checks on banks in the United States and Canada and blank share certificates of numerous companies, chiefly in New York.

Bagley was remanded for a week. A woman who said she was his wife was held as a vagrant.

BOSTON, Aug. 26.—Charles V. Knightley of New York and Boise, Idaho, is wanted in this city to answer a charge of forging and uttering a $525 check on a Boston bank, the larceny of $187.50, and the cashing of a forged check for $5,000, all within the last ten days.

CRIPPEN NEARING ENGLAND.

Liner Megantic with Inspector Dew's Prisoners Expected in To-morrow.

LONDON, Aug. 26.—The steamer Megantic, on which Dr. Hawley H. Crippen and Miss Leneve, formerly his typist, are being taken back to England by Inspector Dew of Scotland Yard, in connection with the supposed murder of Dr. Crippen's wife, Belle Elmore, was reported 200 miles west of Malin Head at 11:35 this morning.

The steamer still has 400 miles to run, which would bring her to Liverpool early in the afternoon to-morrow.

Wireless messages received from the Megantic to-day say that the trip of Dr. Crippen and Miss Le Neve has been without incident thus far. The prisoners are held in close seclusion and are guarded night and day. They are allowed on the promenade deck only at night when Crippen is allowed to take his walk handcuffed to a detective. The prisoners are amply supplied with reading matter, but anything likely to facilitate suicide is vigilantly barred. Otherwise they are treated like first-class passengers. Crippen seems cheerful and sleeps well, and both are anxious to evade public curiosity.

PORTUGUESE GUNBOAT LOST.

Destroyer Wrecked on Berlengas Islands—Crew of 85 Saved.

LISBON, Portugal, Aug. 26.—The Portuguese gunboat Tejo of 533 tons was wrecked to-day on Berlengas Islands, a small rocky group off the west coast of Portugal, about seventy miles north of Lisbon. The crew were all saved.

The Tejo, which was officially rated as a torpedoboat destroyer, was 230 feet long, carried the usual armament of her class, and had a complement of eighty-five men.

CHOLERA WANING, RUSSIANS REPORT

New Cases 16,106, Deaths 7,743 for Week, Against 23,944 and 10,723 Week Before.

OUTBREAK NOW IN VIENNA

Disease Came by Way of Hungary—Roumanian Army Manoeuvres Countermanded for Fear of Infection.

ST. PETERSBURG, Aug. 26.—A slight improvement in cholera conditions in South Russia is shown by the latest reports to the Government Sanitary Bureau and to the Red Cross, which is taken as a sign that the epidemic is now on the wane. Reports to the Sanitary Bureau for the week from Aug. 14 to Aug. 20, inclusive, give 16,106 new cases, and 7,743 deaths, as compared with 23,944 cases and 10,723 deaths for the previous week, making a grand total of 121,091 cases and 58,030 deaths for this year's epidemic.

Of the deaths this week 1,089 are credited to the District of the Don Cossacks, 857 to Yekaterinoslav Province, 547 to the Kuban Cossack District, 554 to Voronezh Province, 363 to Simbirsk Province, 862 to Saratov Province, 327 to Samara Province, 256 to Stavropol Province, and 233 to Tambov Province.

Prof. Rein, at the head of the Special Sanitary Commission dispatched to South Russia to combat the outbreak, reports from Yekaterinoslav that the epidemic in the Donetz mining region in South Russia is on the decrease. At Yuzovka, the principal centre of the district, there are only sporadic cases, and the same is true throughout the Districts of Bakhmut and Slavyanoserbsk. The great improvement is due to the introduction of proper methods of medical aid.

The mine owners of South Russia, who recently declared that they would have to suspend operation on account of the flight of the workmen, and whose refusal to undertake contracts for the delivery of pig iron has embarrassed the iron industry in Russia, report that their workmen are beginning to return to the mines in considerable numbers. The proposal to reduce the duty on pig iron has had a particularly good effect in spurring on the mine owners to take measures to combat the exodus of the workmen.

VIENNA, Aug. 26.—Cholera, it is officially announced, has broken out in this city. After throwing doubt for two days upon the reports of cases in Vienna, the Health Department of the Ministry of the Interior to-day announced that bacteriological examination of several suspected cases had established that the patients were suffering from Asiatic cholera. The victims are from Hungary, into which kingdom the disease spread from Russia.

BUKHAREST, Roumania, Aug. 26.—The Roumanian Army manoeuvres for 1910 were to-day countermanded as a precautionary measure, in view of the epidemic of cholera raging in South Russia, near the Roumanian frontier.

BARI, Italy, Aug. 26.—Fourteen deaths from cholera and twenty-six new cases of the disease during the past twenty-four hours were reported to-day distributed as follows: At Barletta thirteen cases and eight deaths, at Trani three cases and one death, at Andria one case and two deaths, at Margherita Savoia three cases and one death, at Cerignola two cases and one death, and at Trinitapoli four cases and one death.

PORTUGAL FEARS RIOTS.

Strong Military Precautions Against Disorders at Elections Monday.

LISBON, via Frontier, Aug. 25.—Serious apprehensions of disorder during the elections for the Cortes, which occur throughout Portugal Aug. 28, are entertained here due to the persistent reports that the Clerical Party leaders are preparing outbreaks as a protest against the Liberal policy of the Government in its relations with the Vatican.

The Government is taking the most energetic measures of precaution and has recalled every officer, soldier, and sailor on leave to the colors. The warships of the Portuguese Navy have been distributed among the various Portuguese ports to assist the military and civil authorities if disturbances break out.

As the Government telegraph offices refuse to accept dispatches referring to the possibility of disorders this dispatch is sent to the frontier by train.

Notes of Foreign Affairs.

LIVERPOOL, Aug. 26.—Cardinal Vincenzo Vannutelli, the Papal Legate to the coming Eucharistic Congress at Montreal, and Cardinal Logue, Primate of Ireland, sailed to-day for Montreal on the steamer Empress of Ireland. Accompanying them on the steamer were over 100 high ecclesiastical dignitaries and 150 lay members of the Roman Catholic Church, who will attend the congress.

CAIRO, Egypt, Aug. 26.—The American Mission review, El Murchid, voluntarily suspended publication to-day after an existence of eighteen years. The suspension was due to a storm of indignation aroused by an article attacking Islamism, printed in the last edition of the review.

DREDGES HELL GATE MENACE.

Vessels Have Difficulty in Avoiding Collisions in Swift Currents.

There are perils for craft of all kinds that navigate the treacherous waters of Hell Gate on their way to and from the Long Island Sound owing to the work now under way by the Government in the blasting out of the reef at Flood Rock. This work has been under way for several months, and dredges and drilling machines at work are anchored in the centre of the main channel between the Astoria shore at Hallet's Point and Mill Rock in the centre of Hell Gate, so that vessels passing up and down the river are compelled to keep the channel between the dredges and the Astoria shore.

The difficulty of getting through Hell Gate now is to keep off the rocks on the Astoria shore and at the same time avoid being carried into the dredges by the swift currents, and while every day has its number of narrow escapes mishaps are of frequent occurrence.

Three immense machines stretch in a line in the centre of the channel. Hundreds of holes are being driven in the rough granite reef under water by the big drilling machines and blasts are set off at extreme high water. A blast at high water yesterday afternoon shook Astoria and frightened residents.

"EASY MONEY" MEN TRAPPED

Boat Agent Worked with the Police, Who Arrest Two for Stealing Tickets.

While William Hertz of Plainfield, N. J., a ticket seller employed by the Iron Steamboat Company, was on duty at the Battery Wharf, he told Magistrate Herbert in the Jefferson Market Court yesterday, a well-dressed stranger asked if he was willing to make a little "easy money."

Hertz replied that he would, whereupon the stranger said he was Charles Kelly of 3 West Twenty-second Street. He said he could obtain any quantity of steamboat tickets from a friend, and proposed that Hertz should sell the tickets, keep 40 per cent. of the proceeds, and give the rest to him.

Hertz communicated with Inspector Russell, and under instructions from Detectives Gegan and Allen, Hertz told Kelly he would co-operate with him.

Kelly gave him 100 tickets, which he sold, giving Kelly $15 and receiving another 100 tickets. This kept up for a week until the detectives succeeded in locating the man who was furnishing the tickets.

He proved to be, the detectives said, James Young, a clerk of the steamboat company. Young was arraigned before Magistrate Kernochan on Wednesday on a charge of larceny and held for trial.

NOT ARRESTED.

C. K. Stephany Went to Court Voluntarily—No Warrant for Tatkach.

In THE TIMES of Aug. 20, in a special dispatch from Kingston, N. Y., it was stated that in the course of a dispute between Nicholas Tatkach and Charles K. Stephany over a house which Mr. Stephany had purchased both parties had been arrested by the local police.

Investigation shows that this was not the case. Mr. Stephany bought the house as a residence for himself and family. While he was in New York Mr. Tatkach, who said he had a lease on the premises, demanded possession from Mrs. Stephany, and when she refused to vacate he abused her. She had him arrested. When Mr. Stephany came home he demanded an explanation from Tetkach and a fight ensued.

As a result a warrant was sworn out for Stephany's arrest, and a Deputy Sheriff attempted to serve it, but this Deputy Sheriff was afterward removed from office because of his conduct in the case. When Mr. Stephany heard that a warrant had been sworn out for him he voluntarily went to court.

PEANUT SELLER ARRESTED.

One of Driscoll's Men Accuses Prisoner of Selling Short Measure.

Because he sold what purported to be a pint of peanuts and which afterward was found to be many peanuts short, Michael Strianci of 124 East 110th Street was arraigned yesterday in the Harlem Court and held in $200 bail for trial. It was brought out at the hearing that Commissioner Driscoll of the Bureau of Weights and Measures anticipates getting after the peanut vendors.

Strianci has a peanut stand at 110th Street and Fifth Avenue, and on Thursday night Inspector Albert Lutz bought what the Italian said was a pint of peanuts. They were measured and found, the Inspector says, to be 12 6-10 cubic inches short.

In court the Inspector had a glass graduate to show the Magistrate that the peanuts were short measure. The prisoner pleaded that he didn't know of the shortage.

GENERAL STRIKE IN SPAIN.

Proclaimed to Begin Monday—Military Precautions Ordered.

BILBOA, Spain, Aug. 26.—The Workmen's Federation to-day proclaimed a general strike throughout Spain. The strike is to begin next Monday, Aug. 29.

SAN SEBASTIAN, Spain, Aug. 26.—The Government is astonished and somewhat disturbed by the proclamation of a general strike throughout Spain by the Workmen's Federation to-day, because it is framing a law reducing the hours of labor for miners which, it was believed, would satisfy the striking miners.

Strong military precautions have been ordered taken.

FRENCH IMPORTERS PROTEST NEW RULE

Ruin to Business, They Declare, to Forward Samples of Textile Manufactures to Custom Houses

CALLS FOR ALL STYLES MADE

Confusion and Delay Would Result, Importers Say, if Changes Were Made in a Season.

PARIS, Aug. 26.—The remonstrances of the textile exporters to Minister of Commerce Dupuy against the alleged hardships and expense which they say will be caused by the application of the rule of American Consuls requiring exporters to forward to them samples of textiles, except laces and embroidery, which are to be shipped to the United States have reached the proportions of a universal protest.

The commission merchants and manufacturers of France, the Government, the American Consulate in Paris, and the American Chamber of Commerce have been flooded with letters asking that the new regulation be canceled, and the press of the country has taken up the question, and is making a campaign of protest. Exporters say that to carry out the new rule would mean the ruin of their business in America.

The regulation, which has just been sent out, in the middle of the exporting season, requires the submission in duplicate to the nearest American Consulate "at the beginning of the season" of samples of every pattern of textile that is intended for shipment to the United States. In addition to the impossibility of complying with the rule this year, it is pointed out that exporters at the opening of a season do not know what novelties may be shipped before the end of that season, and that the manufacturers by refusing to forward samples to exporters or to give the required description of textiles would confuse and delay the entire machinery of the export trade. Also it is estimated that the loss to the exporter in supplying samples and for labor in complying with the regulation would increase the cost of their goods to the American buyer from 5 to 10 per cent.

The members of the American Chamber of Commerce, who are taking sides with their French brethren, say the new regulation should be annulled.

Mr. Mitchell, the special agent of the United States Government, who was sent here to regulate the export system, arranged to extend the new regulation to laces, trimmings, and embroideries, but the Consulate decided not to enforce this provision. It is understood that M. Jusserand, the French Ambassador to the United States, who sails for New York to-morrow on the steamer Provence, has been instructed to make an official protest to the Washington Government unless, as France hopes, the matter is adjusted before he arrives in the United States.

ELEVATOR FALLS; SIX HURT.

Car Plunges from Seventh Floor to the Basement.

When the cables of a passenger elevator in the Borgfeldt Building, an eleven-story loft structure at 48 and 50 West Fourth Street, slipped from the wheels yesterday noon the car dropped from the seventh floor to the basement. Six of the eight passengers were injured.

Their cries could be heard all over the building and out into the street. One of the first to reach the basement was Max Michaels of 17 St. Mark's Place, Brooklyn. He found the iron door of the shaft locked, but he got a crowbar and smashed the door, releasing the imprisoned passengers.

Dr. O'Keefe and an assistant arrived quickly from St. Vincent's Hospital and attended to these persons for sprained ankles and other slight injuries: Joseph Goldstein, 327 East Third Street; Daniel L. Harris, 345 Saratoga Avenue, Brooklyn; Max Garten, 305 East Fourth Street; Joseph Levy, 394 Van Sicklen Avenue, Brooklyn; Louis Stein, 205 Broome Street, and Henry Pupplewille, the elevator operator. They were taken home.

Immediately following the accident a crowd gathered in the street, which necessitated the calling out of the police reserves of the Macdougal Street Station.

GUARDIAN FOR UNBORN CHILD

All the Tilson Heirs Must Be Represented in Mortgage of Real Estate.

Lawyer Isaac J. Danziger surprised Supreme Court Justice Page yesterday by asking for the appointment of a guardian for a child or children yet to be born, but reference to Section 2,348 of the Civil Code shows that there is provision for just such an application. It was granted.

Under the will of Bethany Smith, who died in 1886, Anah E. S. Tilson received a life interest in some large real estate holdings in this city, to be divided on her death among several classes of heirs. Now, during Mrs. Tilson's lifetime it has become desirable to mortgage certain parcels of real estate, and in the application for permission to do so there must be representation of all the heirs, some of whom may not yet be born.

In legal language, application was made for the "appointment of a guardian for Lida D. Tilson and any unborn persons who may be contingent remaindermen under the will of Bethany Smith, deceased." A hearing in the petition for permission to mortgage is now pending before a referee.

This is a dramatic story by the famous Russian writer, Leonid Andreyev, telling of a prisoner who was sentenced for a murder of which he was innocent. Alone in a dungeon, condemned to die and locked in with only his own thoughts for company —this is the central figure of a great story.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Aug. 26.—Three dynamic home runs of tremendous voltage, two of them by Frank Wildfire Schulte and the other by Joseph Faversham Tinker, blasted another clean-out victory over New York out of the bedrock of to-day's magnificently pitched battle between Mordecai Peter Centennial (Three-fingered) Brown and Louis Stuyvesant Van Winkle Drucke. The score was 3 to 1, making one of the blasts superfluous.

The two blows from Schulte's bludgeon were all that Brownie needed to "bring home the bacon," and he would have required only one of those if J. Evers had not blown a chance to retire Bridwell at the opening of the seventh inning. It is not often in these days of pitching supremacy that it falls to the lot of one hero to deliver two home runs in one game. Still less often do they come with the bases empty, and yet spell victory. And Schulte came within a few feet of making it three straight home runs, for the blow he landed in his first attempt drove the ball almost over the screen in the deepest corner of right field.

As like as twin peas were Schulte's home runs, for both cleared the barrier back of right field, and there was not twenty feet between the two dents they made in the flooring of the stand out there. One of them arrived in the fifth inning after a desperate but fruitless battle on both sides to achieve a tally. For a few minutes it looked as if that drive would be sufficient to win on, then Evers spilled the beans with a double-barreled error, consisting of a fumble and wild throw, which was converted into a tieing run. Up came Schulte again in the eighth and drove the great crowd of fans into the eleventh delirum of insanity by fairly duplicating his previous feat.

As if that were not enough glory for the Cubs in one day, Tinker followed right on Schulte's heels in the eighth with a third home-run smash, but while Wildfire's four-basers were homogeneous, Joe's was decidedly heterogeneous, not to say farce comical. It also was the occasion of a violent spasm on the part of Manager McGraw and the visitors, which resulted in the banishment of the manager for the rest of the game. Tinker's smash sailed loftily and distantly out over left field. A little better guesswork by Devore might have coppered it, but all John could do was to make it hit the tips of his mitt as it curvetted back to earth. By the time the ball was started on the back track Tinker was close to third. Steinfeldt, who was coaching, rushed to the bag to stop Tinker, who checked himself and glanced back. Then, seeing the ball was being thrown to third, Joe took a long chance and broke for the plate again. Devlin, fielding the throw perfectly, wheeled and saw a white uniform within easy reach, so jumped over the bag and tagged Steinfeldt. And Joe Tinker, sixty feet away, legging it for home to beat the band! Before Devlin realized his case of mistaken identity Tinker slid across the plate, and it was too late to relay the ball.

McGraw, and everybody else in gray uniforms, rushed out to protest against Devlin's mistake being counted as a run, and used arguments of various colors, but without effect other than to compel the "canning" of the Giant leader to restore order.

Those three swats were more than half the Cubs made off Drucke. The only other safeties were singles, two of which Hofman smashed out in the earlier rounds without getting a run for his trouble. The Giants did a little better than that off Brown, because they made seven hits; but those seven were good for only eight bases, while the Cubs' five netted them fourteen corners.

In the seventh Evers fumbled Bridwell's bounder, and then threw the ball into the Cub coop, giving the runner second base. Devlin's out put Bridwell on third, and he scored on Merkle's drive through the close infield. Meyers followed with a two-baser into the left-field seats, Merkle being held at third by ground rules. Once more came Drucke in the pinch, and once more he struck out before his cool-brained opponent. Again Devore had the opportunity of his life, and this time he lofted a nice one to Sheckard.

Not until the eighth could the Cubs break that draw. Then up strode Herr Schulte once more, and with greater savoir than usual he poked his bat against another ball that exactly suited him, and sailed it clear of the screen into the corner of the right-field stand. Tinker followed with his homer, already delineated, and the battle was won.

Newark Begins to Climb Again.

Special to The New York Times.

MONTREAL, Quebec, Aug. 26.—Newark ascended the Eastern League pennant ladder again to-day by defeating Montreal, 3 to 1, while Providence beat Rochester, the leaders. Manager McGinnity feels very happy to-night, for he pitched his team to victory, and it is now again within hailing distance of the champion Rochesters. The batting was light on both sides. FOLLIE LEVY LEFT AT POST; BARRED George Odom's Erratic Filly Refuses to Race and Is Banished from the Turf.

Special to The New York Times.

SARATOGA, N. Y., Aug. 26.—It was an off day with the Saratoga Racing Association to-day, and the only feature that was down for decision was the Amsterdam Stakes, a selling affair, over the mile distance. Though there were fourteen horses carded for the race, only four went to the post, and Mary Davis, ridden by the apprentice Estep, was an easy winner over S. C. Hildreth's Restigouche, the only one of the quartette that offered anything approaching a contest.

A decided drop in the temperature came as a relief from the recent hot spell, and the Summer costumes were not as much in evidence, while wraps were not altogether out of place. The attendance was excellent, considering the sport offered, and there was no lack of enthusiasm, even if there was lack of class in some of the fields that performed.

What should have been one of the best races was marred by George Odom's Follie Levy being left at the post. It was a six-furlong selling event, and the daughter of Golden Maxim and Ridicule was the favorite. She had one of the same crazy spells that made her so uncertain at Yonkers, and when the field left she propped, and Jockey Knapp was unable to get her away. After the race she was barred from starting again, the same action that was taken by the Empire City Racing Association after she had been guilty of the same offense.

The mile handicap was really the best race of the afternoon, and it went to Martinez, from the stable of Henry La Montagne. The running demonstrated that Jockey S. Davis had brought about the defeat of the good colt in the Huron Handicap by racing him in front. To-day Martinez trailed the field almost to the stretch, and when he made his move Martinez quickly raced around on the outside and came home a winner by four lengths from Hildreth's Firestone. Shannon and Firestone were the pacemakers, but they were both outrun when Martinez made his move.

Mary Davis won her race rather handily and she, like Martinez, avoided the early pace. Restigouche was rated along in front by Shilling, but when Mary Davis challenged at the last furlong pole he could not keep step with her and he faltered badly under the drive.

Stinger was winner of the opening handicap for the two-year-olds. In this race Heatherbroom started for the first time under the silks of Capt. E. B. Cassatt. She was beaten, but her race was one to suggest that no mistake was made when $5,100 was paid for her at the recent sale of the stable of James R. Keene. Dugan, who rode her, was slow to get her away from the post, and she did not begin to run fast until the stretch was reached. There she closed a big gap to finish third to Stinger and Gauntlet.

Kormak was winner of the seven-furlong dash for selling platers two years old, and at the end of the programme Baron Dieskau beat some maidens very easily over the mile distance. In this race the disappointment was Bishop, the John E. Madden starter. He has been performing with the best horses at the track, and among the maidens it was supposed that he would give a good account of himself. The summaries:

HAMMOND'S NEW MOTOR BOAT

With Speed of 40 Miles an Hour and Will Race Dixie II. or Pioneer.

The new motor boat that was recently launched at the yards of the Rice Engine Company, Bordentown, N. J., is rapidly being put into shape, so that she will be seen this season in local races.

The boat was built for Harris Hammond, son of John Hays Hammond, and is equipped with a 250 horse power two-cycle double acting engine. This engine is the largest of the type that has been built to apply the double acting principle, that is, an explosion is caused on each side of the piston at every stroke.

The hull, designed by Rice, is very substantial and seaworthy, in marked contrast to the majority of fast boats that are built so light that it is impossible to drive them in rough water. She is 39 feet 11 inches over all, and has a beam of 5 feet 6 inches. In her construction mahogany and oak have been used, and while she is a clean lined craft there is nothing at all freakish about her.

Mr. Hammond expects to handle the boat himself, and says that a trial trip will soon be made, after which he intends to race her against Dixie II. and also against Pioneer, if the English boat remains in this country long enough.

Mr. Hammond is connected with the Rice Engine Company, and has named the boat R. E. C., the initial letters of the firm's name. Her builders are confident of a speed of at least forty miles an hour, and they believe she can beat the Pioneer.

FOR WATERWAY LEAGUE CUP.

Speedy Motor Boats Will Race To-day on the Hudson River.

A race for motor boats of all classes will be held on the Hudson River, off the Colonial Yacht Club, this afternoon. The racers will be divided into two classes, one for open and cabin boats and the other for speed boats. Class A will be over a triangular course of four miles, which must be covered four times, making in all sixteen miles. Class B will cover the same course six times, or twenty-four miles. The prize for Class A will be the Waterway League Championship Cup, and the speed boats will race for a special cup presented to the league by the Colonial Yacht Club.

The entries close at 1 o'clock this afternoon, but all boats must have a certificate of measurement from the American Power Boat Association, under whose handicap rules the races will be held. The boats entered must be owned by members of the Waterway League of New York.

The starting gun will be fired at 2 o'clock, and the boats will probably all finish before 4:30.

Last year the club's regatta brought out a high class list of entries, and was a great success, and the regatta committee is confident that this year's race will be even a greater success, both in point of interest and in number of entrants.

New Rochelle R. C. Regatta To-day.

The annual club regatta of the New Rochelle Rowing Club will be held to-day, starting at 2 o'clock. The course is one mile, and the finish line will be at the club float in Echo Bay. The entries for the different events are numerous. Trial heats for the races have been rowed. Only the winners of these heats will compete in the races to-day. The card of events is an attractive one. In addition to the novice and junior singles there are senior singles, double gig, and quadruple sculls. The latter races will bring out the best scullers in the club. Canoe tilting, swimming races, and a live goose chase will be contested at the float while the crews are going to the starting line, and the tiresome waits between events will be avoided.

Regatta on Hackensack River.

The newly formed Hackensack River Boating Association, comprising all the boat clubs along the Hackensack River from Bergen Point to Hackensack, will hold its first annual carnival and regatta at Secaucus this afternoon. The contests of the motor boats promises to be the feature events, and four of the fleetest of the Hackensack Boat Club will be seen in action.

Hibernian Athletic Carnival.

Nine Amateur Athletic Union events are on the programme of the annual picnic and games of the Ancient Order of Hibernians to-morrow at Celtic Park, Long Island City. In addition there will be two games of Association football for the championship of New York State, a tug of war with five-men teams, jig dancing, and four and eight reels. The athletic events have attracted many of the best athletes in the Metropolitan A. A. U. district. One of the features of the games will be a mile walk, which has not been included in any programme at Celtic Park this season.

Warner in Charge of Manhattans.

Jack Warner, the old catcher, is now in command of the reorganized Manhattans, and they will be the principal attraction at Olympic Field, 136th Street and Fifth Avenue, to-morrow afternoon. The Manhattans will play the winner of the first game between the New York Colored Giants and Laurel Hills. Warner has signed Pete Adrian of the Utica club to pitch for the Manhattans and he will also have some of the strongest local semi-professionals in the Manhattans' line-up.

McNultys in Both Games.

Baseball rooters who patronize McNulty Field, 149th Street and Eighth Avenue, to-morrow afternoon will be treated to the most interesting entertainment of the season in the shape of a double header. The strong McNulty team will be in both games. In the first tussle the McNultys will meet the Yonkers Field Club, and in the second Durkin's men will play against the Black Sox. Donley and Brown will pitch for the McNultys, with Seamon behind the bat. Kartz and Bremer will be the Yonkers battery and Crawford and Collins will be in the points for the Black Sox.

Gibson Changes Catching Offer.

Preston Gibson of Washington, D. C., who recently offered $100 to any major league catcher who would break the record for catching a ball thrown from the top of the Washington Monument, stipulates in the offer that to win the prize the catcher must hold the first ball dropped on a given day.

Munsey Autoists Reach Harrisburg.

HARRISBURG, Penn., Aug. 26.—The automobiles in the Munsey historic tour reached Harrisburg this afternoon and were parked for the night. To-morrow morning they will leave for the last day's run of the tour, the destination being Washington. The incoming tourists were met by a delegation of the Motor Club of Harrisburg and escorted into the city, and to-night they were entertained at the club headquarters.

Lacrosse Game Under Artificial Light.

CHICAGO, Aug. 26.—C. A. Comiskey's recently installed lights received their first real tryout at the American League grounds last night, when the Illinois Athletic Club and Calumet Lacrosse teams battled for over two hours in a fast match in the glare of over 1,000,000 candle power of light, which constitutes a portion of the lighting plant that will give Chicago night baseball in the near future. The plant proved itself equal to the occasion, for the test held up to what was expected. The Illinois Athletic Club won the game 11 to 10, but this fact was lost to view in the confusion resulting from the pronounced success of the light plant—and at that the ground lights were curtailed, and only half the power was in use. At no time during the eighty minutes of play did the players find it hard to follow the ball, but the game proved as fast and as interesting as if it had been played in broad daylight.

Honolulu Clubs to Join A. A. U.

CHICAGO, Aug. 26.—Everett C. Brown, President of the National Amateur Athletic Union, yesterday received a communication from Lorrin Andrews, an attorney in Honolulu, Hawaii, stating that he is promoting the organization of ten athletic clubs, which will apply for admission in the National body of the Amateur Athletic Union at the annual meeting in November. Mr. Andrews said that athletic activities in the Hawaiian Islands are in a high state of development, and that they will be advanced by affiliation with the governing athletic body of the United States.

JOAN WINS BONNER MEMORIAL STAKES

Ed Geers's Dudie Archdale Outtrotted in Both Heats on Empire City Track.

In spite of the threatening weather another large crowd turned out to see the closing day's events of the Empire City Grand Circuit meeting yesterday afternoon. Those that were scared away missed a contest with the biggest field of starters this season with one exception, when an even dozen contested in the Bonner Memorial Stakes for 2:25 trotters.

The chief attraction of the first race was "Pop" Geers's Dudie Archdale, winner of three $10,000 stakes, the Furniture City at Grand Rapids, one at Kalamazoo, and the M. & M. at Detroit, also the $5,000 The Ohio at Cleveland, who was beaten by the Cleveland owned four-year-old Joan in one of the best speed contests of the year.

The footing was slow on account of early rains, yet safe for the horses to make fast time. In spite of the big field Starter Walker was able to give the word in the fifth score. Dudie flew to the front before the turn was reached from fourth position, the break of Albia at the start in second position giving her ample space. Joan, who had the pole, hung on to Dudie, with Camera and Ario Leyburn close, the balance being strung out. At the half Ario beat Camera, yet was a bad third to the leaders up to the back stretch, where Cox brought up Mary G. on the outside by a fast clip to fourth position. Dudie still maintained her lead after they had reached the home stretch and advanced to the seventh furlong, where driver McDevitt urged Joan, who responded nobly, and before getting the distance had Dudie beaten, although the finish was close. Ario Leyburn was too far from the trailers to lose his third position.

Early in the second heat Dudie again took the inside from Joan, but the latter lapped with her to the quarter in slow time, with Ario Leyburn, Captain George, and Sterling Hall following as named. From the first quarter Ario Leyburn, by a fine burst of speed, overtook Joan, and set sail after Dudie, compelling her to step the second quarter in 30½ seconds, a fast clip over the slow and heavy footing. This effort took all the steam out of Ario, however, and he jumped in the air at the half, giving Joan an opening to close up and set the pace, also a chance to Murphy to push Captain George to third position.

At the last turn and down the entire home stretch there was another battle royal between Dudie and Joan, for some distance the pair teaming. Less than fifty feet from the wire the winner could not be picked, but Joan just nosed out the fast black mare under the wire in one of the closest finishes seen during the meeting. Captain George was an easy third, while Mary G. and the White Plains entry, Sterling Hall, had a very interesting battle for fourth position through the entire stretch. Fred Hopes, the well-known Speedway trotter, driven by Billy Brooks, made his début in Grand Circuit society, but failed to avoid the red flag in the opening heat.

Only three horses started in the pacing division of the American Trotting Horse Breeders' Matron Stake, and in spite of the small field and heavy footing made the event quite a racing feature. Leftwitch, bred by L. V. Harkness of this city, at his Walnut Hill farm, proved the best of the field and won in straight heats.

Only Geers's The Abbe, winner of rich pacing stakes of 1910, including the Detroit C. of C., and which has a mark of 2:04, and Cox's Brenham Baughman, which has shown speed around the same notch, started for the $2,500 Fashion Stakes. There was much amusement all over the track when the pair paced the first mile in 2:12, the same as the three-year-olds, but this was fully made up when they traveled the second heat in 2:07, going the first half in 1:01¼, and the second quarter in a two-minute clip. "I WILL."

There is something extremely interesting in the tone of Mr. ROOSEVELT's speeches in the near-west. "I will make the corporations come to time and I will make the mob come to time whenever I have the power. I shall insist on honesty if it breaks up the best business of the land and I shall insist on order under all circumstances." And again: "I stand for decent citizenship. I am against the corporation when it does wrong and I am against the mob when it resorts to violence. And whenever I have power I will keep order on the one hand and I will insist upon justice from the rich and from the corporation on the other."

This is not exactly the language of a man retiring from public life, still less is it the language of a man seeking to avoid re-entrance on public life.' If Mr. ROOSEVELT were "campaigning," if he were engaged in enlisting the sympathy, support, and admiration of his fellow-countrymen, with a direct view to an approaching election, the tone he assumes, the words he employs would be quite consistent with his obvious aims and needs. We do not at the moment think of any other hypothesis that fits the case.

It might, indeed, be supposed that on the eve of Congressional elections, when his party, and when especially the President, is involved in serious difficulties, Mr. ROOSEVELT would feel drawn to lend the aid of his popularity to the solution of those difficulties. If he is so drawn, he so far has resisted the temptation with entire success. His actual course has quite the opposite tendency. In presenting all over the land, with his usual emphasis and energy, these declarations of what he believes, of his ideals as to public officers of what he will do when he has the power, he forces on the public mind an inevitable comparison between himself and his successor in the Presidency. And he takes no pains to make the comparison favorable to the President. This may not be party loyalty, it may not be loyalty to his former friend and associate, it may even not be the broadest and most unselfish patriotism, but it will generally be recognized as peculiarly Rooseveltian.

THE MAURETANIA SEARCH.

The passengers on the Mauretania who suffered the indignity of having their cabin doors opened by the Customs Inspectors Thursday night might be justified in calling the search of the staterooms an outrage. A sleeping family, aroused by the summons to open their cabin door, would certainly feel that this country's boasted freedom had been suspended. Probably the rest of us regard the search and its attendant circumstances chiefly as another specimen of the opera bouffe extravagance of the customs officials. The search, however, was confined to staterooms which had been vacated. It is said that the department had been informed that diamonds valued at a huge sum of money were concealed somewhere on the steamship. Still, if the diamonds had been there, the end would scarcely have justified the means.

Collector LOEB and his assistants are American citizens. They do not believe that every other American citizen should be held guilty of smuggling until his innocence is proved. They do not believe that the fact that a man has visited Europe and returned is sufficient to justify the suspicion that he is a smuggler. The order for the general search seems to have been given hastily and carried out as clumsily as possible. It was an unfortunate order. The incident serves to make the Customs Service seem ridiculous.

STEWARDSHIP.

The Federal Government is not a good steward. That is Mr. GIFFORD PINCHOT's own testimony with respect to the destructive forest fires that in the past week have licked up millions of dollars' worth of property in the Northwest. In his statement, issued yesterday, Mr. PINCHOT notes that "the Fire Department of every city is organized with the prime idea of getting to the fire when it is young," and with an adequate force. Congress should have equipped the Western National forests with "roads, trails, telephone lines, and a reasonable number of men for patrol." But it didn't.

A State Government, like a city, makes a better steward. This State, for example, has provided the kind of supervision that Mr. PINCHOT calls for. At the close of the "danger season," Nov. 27, 1909, the State Forest Commissioner reported a total damage of $25,101; 11,967 acres burned over were private holdings, and, of the State's immense forest tracts, only 198 acres were burned. The installation of the fire-fighting service in 1909 had reduced the average loss in each forest preserve town to $5.76, as compared with $4,915.77 loss in 1908. The new system embraced 281 towns, more than twice as much territory as under the old system. Its increase of efficiency based on number of fires was 180 per cent., and, based on number of acres burned, 1,303 per cent.

Yet Mr. PINCHOT's sovereign reliance is on the stewardship of the Federal Government. He distrusts the States.

THE KAISER'S DIVINE RIGHT.

The Kaiser made a great speech at Koenigsberg Thursday night, great in its meaning, its audacity, (as it impresses the democratic mind in a democratic age,) in its largeness of utterance. He commanded the women of his empire to cultivate the domestic virtues as the men cultivate the military virtues. He commended the huge standing army, always prepared for war. He urged Germans to live for the Fatherland alone, to devote all their strength and intelligence to the welfare of the country. He lauded the divine right of Kings. The crown was placed on his grandfather's head "by GOD's grace alone, and not by Parliaments, assemblages of the people, or resolutions of the people." The Kaiser proclaimed himself "the instrument of the Master."

The same day the will of the people in a district in Saxony, polling nearly 25,000 votes, a majority of which have hitherto been cast for the Conservative upholder of the divine right of Kings in the Reichstag, elected a Socialist member by a large majority over all other candidates. The Socialists now have 51 votes in the German Parliament. The Radicals, too, are gaining. And not all or nearly all the members generally relied upon to support the Government hold to the Emperor's antiquated theory of the divine right of Kings.

DEATH PENALTY AT CROSSINGS.

President RALPH PETERS of the Long Island Railroad says that his company deeply deplores the recent terrible grade crossing accidents, but he calls upon each individual, when approaching a crossing, to use "due diligence and care to protect himself." That is the individual's duty.

It is his duty, also, to safeguard himself and his family against burglars; to beware lest they eat infected food and drink polluted water; to house them in fireproof or protected buildings, and, in every way, to guard their health and lives. These duties of the individual are supreme. But the fact that the individual is lax does not excuse defects in the administration of the Tenement House law, of the Pure Food law, of the sanitary laws, or of any police measure designed to protect the public. The faults of individuals do not excuse the State or its servants, of which the Long Island Railroad is one, from the strict performance of their duties.

The present duty of the Long Island Railroad is to abolish its grade crossings more rapidly. The duty of the two Public Service Commissions is to enforce their more rapid abolition. The railway traffic is increasing. The highway traffic is increasing enormously. The protection of gates and flagmen is not to be relied on in the face of such traffic. The record of the past two and one-half years within this city shows fifty-six persons killed and a hundred injured at such crossings. With tracks elevated or depressed none would have been killed, none injured. Individual negligence is bad, but it does not deserve the death penalty.

TO NAME THE BOYS DICKENS.

The proposition of one of our readers, printed yesterday, to celebrate the centenary of CHARLES DICKENS by bestowing his name on all the boy babies born Feb. 7, 1912, does honor to the proposer's heart. He is a Dickens enthusiast full of the true spirit. If all parents of boys in England and America born on the one hundredth anniversary of the novelist's birth should adopt his suggestion the name of CHARLES DICKENS would be greatly multiplied. But the chances are that there would not be a Dickens in the lot.

It should be borne in mind, too, that DICKENS was christened CHARLES JOHN HUFFAM, and dropped his two middle names because they were unduly burdensome, before he achieved fame. Similarly many of the boys named in his honor on his centenary would be likely to drop the Dickens, feeling it a handicap to their success in life. What would it profit a plumber or an agriculturist to call himself Dickens? The result would be merely a superabundance of Charlies. The English-speaking world already has its fair share of Charlies, and the addition to them of the whole batch of boys born on a certain day would overcrowd the ranks. On the other hand, if some of the boys liked the name, and were trained to honor its original bearer, they might be impelled to drop the Charles and retain only the Dickens. In that case most of them would be called Dick and there is no particular distinction in Dick these days.

Why would it not be a better plan, instead of naming all the boys Charles Dickens, to name all the children born on the day of the celebration after characters in his works? The girls could be Betsy Trotwoods, Estellas, Kate Nicklebys, Bella Wilfers, Sarah Gamps, the boys Samuel Wellers, Paul Dombeys, Jonas Chuzzlewits, John Chiverys. A census of the names of the day would indicate the relative popularity of the novels of DICKENS and the personages of his invention. We have no means of knowing just how many children will be born in the English-speaking world Feb. 7, 1912, but the number will be large. The number is large every day, and the human race keeps on multiplying. A practical and novel way of celebrating so great a writer's centenary is desirable, and, while applauding our correspondent's plan, we submit our own amendment of it without prejudice and with a humble intent to help along a good cause.

BRITISH SPIES IN GERMANY.

It was high time for the discovery of British spies in Germany. As yet the evidence to justify the theory of some German newspapers that British espionage in their empire is systematic is somewhat tenuous. But two English travelers taking snapshot photographs in the neighborhood of the fortifications at Borkum and Emden have been arrested and their films confiscated before development. The English have discovered German spies all over their territory. There have been times when a hard-working German barber in London has found life scarcely worth living because of the suspicion resting upon him. All German musicians have been regarded with distrust, and England must have German musicians if it has music.

The men arrested as spies in Germany may have been peaceable tourists unaware of the restrictions on the use of the camera near fortified places. If they could have proved themselves Americans they surely would have escaped arrest. An American tourist without a snapshot camera and the disposition to use it everywhere, in spite of local restrictions, is a rarity. Even if the two alleged spies were purposely disobeying the German law when they took their photographs, the incident does not prove that the often-predicted European war is any nearer at hand. The real spy business is not conducted in that manner. Moreover, if these persons were competent and accredited spies, they would have no difficulty in plausibly explaining their conduct. They act as if they were angry because they were arrested. Spies do not get angry.

THE CLOAKMAKERS.

The plan of Mr. LOUIS D. BRANDEIS, which the 75,000 striking cloakmakers rejected, and the more recent proposal of the strikers, which the Manufacturers' Association has in turn rejected, seem much alike:

BRANDEIS'S PLAN.	STRIKERS' PROPOSAL.
The preferential union shop is a shop in which union men are given the preference.	We, the members of the Manufacturers' Association, hereby agree in employing help in our various mechanical departments, that as between union men and non-union men of equal ability to do the job, we will employ union men as long as union men are obtainable.
The manufacturers can and will declare in appropriate terms their sympathy with the union; their desire to aid and strengthen the union; and their agreement that as between union men and non-union men of equal ability to do the job, they will employ union men.	We reserve the right to discharge for incompetence or misbehavior, but pledge ourselves not to discharge any one for his or her affiliations with the union.

Had the strikers presented their form of agreement at the time Mr. BRANDEIS's plan was broached with the assent of the Manufacturer's Association, it would have been acceded to without material change. The strike would have been declared off. The grievances of the cloakmakers, as their friend Mr. BRANDEIS assured them, would have been redressed. Hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of business that has been withdrawn to other cities would have been saved, and untold suffering, present and to come, would have been spared the strikers' families. Even though a compromise should at last be effected, it will be impossible to restore work to them all.

The strikers rejected the plan of the "preferential union shop" through distrust of the manufacturers; the manufacturers later rejected essentially the same plan through distrust of the workers. In an occupation involving an annual local business of $180,000,000 the policy of mutual distrust is costly.

RAT-PROOFING A CITY.

San Francisco is being "rat-proofed." The word has become part of the San Franciscan vocabulary, like "waterproofing," and refers to a style of brick and concrete architecture that is enforced by condemnation proceedings in portions of the city, until now the centres of rat population.

Eighteen months have passed since the last capture of a rat afflicted with the bubonic plague—the "Black Death" of history, which fleas borne by the rats spread to human hosts. But the fight to exterminate the rodents goes on. According to the report of Dr. G. M. CONVERSE of the United States Public Health and Marine Hospital Service the sewers are being poisoned and the rats are being caught in cages and snap traps at the rate of 8,600 monthly. In "Butchertown," in the congested Japanese quarters, and in the wholesale fruit and produce section of the town, the ramshackle buildings are being rat-proofed in their basements or entirely replaced with solid structures.

By and by every American city may be rat-proofed, fly-proofed, tick-proofed, and mosquito-proofed, until these death-dealing vermin are utterly destroyed.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

To Burn Money Forbidden. Certain Indians out at Fort Yuma, in the exercise of what no inconsiderable part of the world's present and past population would call both reason and piety, recently burned money to the amount of $2,000 as part of the funeral exercises over the body of a respected tribesman. This fact having come to the attention of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, it has forbidden its wards hereafter thus to waste their scanty resources. This prohibition strikes us as rather arbitrary, and by no means as easily and fully defensible as the officials who issued it possibly assume.

The dispatch which describes the burning of the money says that the thing was done as a sacrifice to the god of fire. Of course it was not that at all, but a generous effort to provide the dead man with funds for use in the other world, and the Yuma Indians are far from being alone in believing that the desired end could be thus accomplished. It is only within centuries comparatively recent that anybody anywhere had any doubts on that point, and their faith, in one or another guise, is still shared by all savage and barbarous peoples and by not a few great nations with no little right to call themselves civilized.

We incline to agree with bureau officials in thinking that the Indians do not put their money to its most profitable use when they burn it at funerals in compliance with what seems to us an undemonstrable, if not untenable, theory as to the transmitting powers of flame. But who are we, or the bureau officials, that we should set our skepticism against the red man's ancient and widely surviving faith, and tell him that he shall not make of his own a disposition which, if it hurts anybody else, does so only in a most oblique and indirect way? One need not go as far as Fort Yuma to find funerals which, in the judgment of almost everybody except those who pay for them, are marked by a lavishness of expenditure useless to the dead and economically most injurious to the living.

To talk and preach against this as extravagance is justifiable, but to forbid it to those whom the talking and preaching do not convince would be quite another thing—a thing which in this country few would suggest and none attempt—except as to Indians—since the resulting protest would be instant, emphatic, and effective. As for the Indians, they could easily have put their $2,000 to more harmful uses than that of burning it at a funeral, and perhaps they could have spent it for nothing that would have given them an equal amount of satisfaction and contentment.

Finds No Poor in New York! Prof. ADSHEAD, the Englishman who has come over here to make a study of the way we house our poor, has noticed with a surprise that has been shared by many a New Yorker when by some rare chance he strayed into the tenement regions, that even in what are called the slum districts few evidences are to be seen of the bitter poverty and hardship of which so much is heard. Our visitor, fresh from investigating conditions in the big cities of England, goes so far as to say that we haven't anybody here who can properly be described as poor. In the meanest streets he found the people "exceedingly well dressed, well fed, and clean in their persons."

He is, of course, telling only what is to be seen at a hurried and superficial glance. Had he gone deeper he could have found more than enough of hunger and rags and sickness, as well as the overcrowding which he did find, but it is a fact that to the casual stroller through the east side the visible residents, old and young, seem to be all doing something more than fairly well. Those who are not keep out of sight with almost amazing success, and the most unfortunate of them have not yet fallen so low as to exhibit and exploit their wretchedness.

MISTAKES OF DRUGGISTS.

Important Lesson for Physicians and Public in Fatal Error.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

With much regret do I learn of the fatal error, resulting in the death of a baby, by the dispensing of lysol, an antiseptic and germicide for external use, in place of laxol, an aromatic castor oil and proprietary medicine.

While you blame the drug clerk, and perhaps rightly, it would, however, be interesting to learn particulars regarding the exact reading of this prescription. Physicians often, very often in fact, do not write prescriptions very plainly, and the names laxol and lysol are dangerously similar. Physicians, furthermore, very frequently do not mark any directions on the prescription how to take or how to use the medicine, but employ such general directions: "Use as directed," which, in the first place, leaves the pharmacist in the dark, and, in the second place, affords no protection to the patient.

In my annual address as Chairman of the Section of Practical Pharmacy and Dispensing of the American Pharmaceutical Association at the Richmond convention in May, 1910, I again called attention to this condition, which needs to be remedied by the following paragraph:

"Similarity of Names: The coined trademark names in a great many instances are too nearly alike, and might even cause dangerous errors, as, for instance, lysol and laxol."

My address was printed in several pharmaceutical journals, and also in the August number of the Bulletin of the A. Ph. A. If this drug clerk would have read it he most certainly would have been on his guard.

This said incident should prove a lesson to all concerned, as follows:

1. The physician should write his prescriptions very plainly, avoid patent medicines, and avoid such general directions "as directed," &c.

2. The pharmacist should be very careful in filling prescriptions, and should constantly bear in mind that life or death will depend upon the medicine.

3. The public should only patronize the reliable, careful, conscientious, and skillful pharmacist, who devotes himself to pharmacy, and especially to prescriptions, and not to all sorts of side lines.

Pasteurized Milk.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The noble work of Nathan Straus should not be terminated in this city, because of the spiteful attacks of a disgruntled newspaper.

The milk stands have been a genuine public philanthropy, unequaled in their benefits, and only require to be provided with paraffine paper individual cups, to be destroyed after one use, which improvement will make them perfect in every respect.

If Nathan Straus declines to continue, then the City Government should carry on this very necessary aid to public health with all safeguards.

THE TARIFF BOARD.

Power Too Restricted to Bring About Real Revision.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

What is the real status of the so-called Tariff Board? This body is now being exalted into a genuine Tariff Commission, but it has not a vestige of the authority or even name of a genuine commission. A great effort was made by many Chambers of Commerce, manufacturers hurt by the tariff on raw materials, and experts on the subject, to secure the creation of a Tariff Commission. This effort was vigorously opposed by Senator Aldrich and the "standpatters." They wanted no prying into their sacred schedules. So in Section 2 of the Administrative act, known as the maximum and minimum clause of the tariff, this clause was inserted: "To secure information to assist the President in the discharge of the duties imposed upon him by this section (maximum and minimum) and the officers of the Government in the administration of the customs laws, the President is hereby authorized to employ such persons as may be required."

Is there any mention there of a Tariff Board or Commission? Moreover, the power of "the persons" is strictly defined to be "to assist the President in the discharge of the duties imposed upon him by this section." Nothing there about ascertaining the difference in the costs of production extending over the whole range of the tariff. Most significant of all, "the persons" have no power to subpoena persons or books—that is, to compel information from sources within the jurisdiction of the United States. The so-called board (not so designated by the law) was left without power or jurisdiction.

The real Tariff Commission of 1882 had ample power and was created as a commission. The report of this commission to Congress, after more than a year's work, recommended a reduction of 25 per cent. in the then tariff schedules.

Congress, to which the report was made, ignored even this recommendation, and, in the logrolling which creates every Tariff bill, actually advanced the rates of duty.

What would Congress do to a body never even created by Congress as a commission and which can report only to the President? There is only one answer. An examination beyond "the maximum and minimum" clause is strictly beyond the scope of the persons designated by the President.

Real revision must come through Congress. Punish the men who have played with the people's hopes of reform. This can be done only by retiring every "standpatter" from Congress. Then elect a Congress and a President upon the vital issue of a thorough cleaning out of the Augean stables of "protectionism."

That is the remedy and the only remedy for existing conditions.

BICYCLE INDUSTRY.

Export Trade Fallen Off, but the Business Is Prosperous.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

We have noted your interesting editorial article in this morning's issue, entitled "Forsaken but Not Forgotten," in which you call attention to the fact that the exportation of bicycles from this country during the past ten years has dropped from $7,000,000 to $600,000.

While your comments are fairly true, for the information of your readers we, as publishers of the oldest bicycle paper in this country, beg to state that there has been no decline in the manufacture or use of bicycles for business and pleasure in the United States during the past five years.

It is a fact, however, that America has lost its export trade, as statistics that we have at hand show that Great Britain, for the six months ended June, 1910, exported 69,600 bicycles, to the value of $1,454,440, as against 56,827 bicycles, valued at $1,353,995, during the same period in 1909; while Germany, during the same six months of this year, exported 65,496 bicycles, as against 54,857 in the same period of 1909.

During the six months ended Aug. 1, 1910, the bicycle industry in this country reports the most prosperous period in its history since the much-regretted boom days. Three of the leading bicycle manufacturers of America have had individual outputs, for the year from Aug. 1, 1909, to Aug. 1, 1910, exceeding 60,000 machines, and their orders for 1911 are away ahead of those of a year ago for 1910.

At the present time more bicycles are being ridden for pleasure than has been the case for years past, as will be evidenced by a visit to any place outside of Greater New York, while the exercise still is indulged in by such veteran riders as ex-President Eliot of Harvard, James A. Stillman of the National City Bank, A. A. Adee, Assistant Secretary of State of the United States, who continues to spend all of his vacations in Europe awheel; John D. Rockefeller, and others, while many notable new riders constantly are swelling the list.

MORAL OF THE CENSUS.

Seems to Show That Beer Is Not Good for Cities.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It's a poor census that doesn't present a few moral leadings. For example, note the lagging, languid gait of the three most "beerious" of American cities—Cincinnati, St. Louis, and Milwaukee. While the general average percentage of increase of cities is about 25 per cent. for the decennial period, Cincinnati increased only 38,681, about 12 per cent. The preceding ten years was as bad. Milwaukee is utterly overshadowed by Detroit, and while St. Louis did better, with a gain of 20 per cent., it is behind the average, and is only one-third the size of Chicago, although it had the advantage of many decades start, and is the centre of the rich Mississippi Valley.

Other cities drink beer, to be sure, but they don't make beer drinking their life business as these three do. Everybody drinks beer, all the time, and evidently everybody "thinks beer," also, in the cities named.

Brandy stimulation has given the world some fine things, including some of Daniel Webster's speeches. Wine and whisky have stimulated artists, poets, and authors, as well as captains of industry. Champagne brains throw off enlightening scintillations. But I'll be blessed if beer brains ever did anything, except to bovinely and contentedly go to sleep.

Beer is not bad for working people, if they can rightfully afford it. Beer keeps them contented. But it is no drink for the men who have the thinking and planning to do for an American city. This idea ought to be worth something to these three lagging municipalities.

What's Funny About This?

To the Editor of The New York Times:

After a sojourn of two years in the United States, I have reached the conclusion that as a Nation the American people are not only the wittiest but the most humorous on earth today. There is a distinct difference between wit and humor, perhaps most aptly set forth in these terms: Wit is laughing at other people's faults, humor is laughing at one's own. So that to claim the double distinction a happy admixture of egoism and altruism must exist.

Every day I find evidence of both qualities. Why, only this morning, your valuable paper in commenting upon the approaching Presidential election in Nicaragua quotes from some "unofficial talk" at Washington as follows: "The United States will take upon herself to guarantee the fairness of the Presidential election in Nicaragua. * * *"

MORE TO KEEP CITY'S POOR.

High Prices Bring Out Larger Appropriation for Charities.

The increased cost of living will cost the Charities Department more than $175,000 for food supplies in 1911 than during the current year, according to the estimates submitted yesterday to the Finance Department. Expenses show an increase of $1,040,103 over the total amount available for the present year. On the budget allowance for 1910 the estimate shows an increase of $1,240,103. The budget provision was $2,682,612, and the additional sum of $200,000 was provided in revenue bonds. The total of the 1911 estimate, divided into sixty-three counts, is $3,922,715.

In connection with the increased cost of living the Commissioner points out that the daily census in the Charities Department has increased 471, but he attributes the increased estimate to rising prices in the provision market. He points out that higher prices were paid for necessaries in 1909 than in 1908, and that still higher prices are now being paid over last year. Meat, milk, butter, eggs, and sugar all have jumped in price.

To pay increased salaries and wages the Commissioner asks $327,882. He explains that in almost every case this is necessary to get increased efficiency of service. Employes in the lower grades, he states, have been underpaid. Commissioner Drummond aims to improve the hospital helper service by slight increases and to obtain better care and treatment of patients as well as of property and equipment of the department. The department, it is stated, cares daily for more than 10,000 sick or otherwise dependent persons, and enrolls a total of 2,458 workers. The estimate will be fully illustrated at the Budget Exhibit at 330 Broadway during October, and there will be a display of various features of departmental work. Officials of the department will also deliver a series of lectures at the exhibit.

SUES POSTAL FOR $125,000.

New York Merchant Blames an Error in a Telegram for His Failure.

Alleging that because of an error in the transmission of a telegram by the Postal Telegraph-Cable Company he was damaged to the extent of $125,000, Henry Moritz, formerly a clothing merchant at 1,241 Broadway, has begun suit in the Supreme Court to recover that sum. According to the complaint, Mr. Moritz, while preparing to open his clothing store, negotiated with a Chicago manufacturing firm to advance him $10,000 as working capital the first year and $1,000 a year for several subsequent years.

Having obtained an option on the lease, he says, he sent a telegram apprising the Chicago firm of the fact and asking them if he could depend on them for the $10,000. The firm replied in the affirmative, and Moritz went ahead, he says, and contracted for other heavy outlays of money. When he called upon the Chicago firm for the $10,000, however, he declares that they produced a telegram from him which read $1,000 instead of the $10,000.

He investigated, he avers, and found that the operators in sending and receiving the message had dropped one cipher from the $10,000, making the telegram read $1,000. Because of this, the complaint charges, Moritz failed in his business enterprise, and was damaged to the extent of the $125,000 he sues for.

ACCUSES THE PENNSYLVANIA

Coal Company Says Railroad Won't Grant It Through Rates.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 26.—The Bader Coal Company of Maine to-day filed with the Inter-State Commerce Commission a complaint against the Pennsylvania Railroad and the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, alleging discrimination in favor of competitors.

The complainant contends that the defendants have continually refused to grant it joint through rates on shipments of coal from the Allegheny coal region in Pennsylvania to points in New England. It is said that the railroads' refusal to grant this joint through rate is illegal because it is granted to competing coal companies.

Moreover, the new railroad law empowers the commission to order the fixing of through rates.

The rooms now occupied by the Coroners in the Criminal Court Building will be used by the Special Sessions Justices.

Spanish a World Language.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

If there were no such language as Spanish, Esperanto, or something like it, would be a necessity to a world of intelligent beings who could perceive the absurdity of being stricken deaf and dumb the moment they crossed an imaginary boundary line. But I think the chief merit of Esperanto lies in its being so like Spanish in its simple, musical sounds and in its regularity; and I wonder whether the greater simplicity which is undeniably in favor of the former could ever balance the advantages possessed by Spanish in being alive and full grown, and accessible for practical uses here and now.

A language which embodies in such delightful form so great a part of the common lingual inheritance of nearly all the countries of Europe, which will be the mother tongue of undreamed-of millions in the vast continent to the south of us, deserves to be, if not a world language, then the Western World language; and it would not be unfitting that the language of the European country which opened up the New World should serve as a bond to unite both hemispheres.

The Art of Teaching.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your issue of the 24th, under the heading "Teachers' Salaries," the writer, whose letter is initialed "V. J. B.," hits the nail on the head.

Mere education, no matter how complete, should not entitle one to teach in our public schools. Not one in fifty knows how to impart what may have been acquired through what is known as education, for, to my mind at least, the fundamental principle of the art of teaching is knowing how, rather than merely knowing facts.

Let the matter of sex be eliminated, together with the incompetents, and give to those who know how, a compensation which, no matter how large, would be well invested in the Government kindergarten, which is really what our public schools should one day become.

MONTEFIORE HOME ARCHITECTS RETIRE

Competitors in Plans for New Institution in the Bronx Dissatisfied with Terms.

MAY DELAY CONSTRUCTION

Proposal of Architects Rejected by the Building Committee, Whose Chairman Resigns.

Dissatisfied, it is said, with the conditions imposed, at least nine architects have withdrawn from the competition in plans for the new $750,000 Montefiore Home for Chronic Invalids in the Bronx, of which Jacob H. Schiff is President.

The new home was to succeed the present institution at Broadway and 138th Street, Manhattan, but it was thought by some last night that the retirement of the architects who had entered the competition would delay its construction.

Coincident with this action by all except two of the competing architects comes the statement that Adolph Liebmann, Chairman of the Building Committee when the competition was launched, has sent in his resignation to Mr. Schiff and that it has been accepted. This information was confirmed by Mr. Liebmann at his Summer home at Long Branch, N. J., but he would not discuss the situation. It was learned that Samuel Sachs had succeeded Mr. Liebmann, the appointment having been made last week. What effect this change would have or what influence, if any, would now be brought to bear to induce the architects to reconsider their determination not to compete could not be ascertained. Nearly all the architects who entered the competition were out of the city, as were most of the Building Committee. Those who could be reached preferred not to discuss the situation, or referred all inquiries to Mr. Schiff himself. At Mr. Schiff's Summer home at Seabright it was said last night that he was out and was not expected home until late.

The architects who withdrew asserted, it said, that not only were the conditions of the competition unsatisfactory to them, but were not in accordance with the conditions prescribed for competitions by the American Institute of Architects.

Among the architects who went into the competition and then retired are Robert D. Kohn, Charles H. Israels of Israels & Harder, Herts & Tallant, Taylor & Levi, Edward Necarsulmer, Rauss & Goldstone, and Harry Allan Jacobs.

Eleven of their profession were invited to enter this competition. The first prize was to be the commission to supervise the erection of the new buildings. As these were to cost three-fourths of a million dollars, no complaint whatever, it is understood, was raised to this offer. The second prize was to be $1,000, and the third, $500.

The architects assert that under the rules of the American Institute of Architecture, as members of the New York chapter, they had to get the approval of the institute before they could enter a competition. The New York chapter of the institute so informed the Building Committee of the Montefiore Home, and about the same time some of the competing architects informed the committee by letter that they did not care to enter the contest unless certain wishes of theirs were met.

Information came to them from Mr. Schiff himself, some of the dissenters say, that the Building Committee would consider the conditions fixed by the American Institute of Architecture, but could not meet those named by the competing architects. The latter called a meeting at once, then passing a resolution setting forth that as the Building Committee had declined to meet them, or, as they were informed, even discuss the letter sent to it by them, there was nothing else for them to do but withdraw.

The architects had contended that the compensation offered was not in accordance with the schedule of the Institute of Architects; that the competitors were limited to a specific sum, no matter what the buildings might cost; that insufficient medical information was given on which the architects were to base their work, and, finally, that more than sixty-five drawings were required, entailing a cost, they estimated, of not less than $2,000. While the successful competitor would be protected under this arrangement, all others were certain to be considerable losers.

Besides Adolph Liebmann, on the Building Committee when the invitation to architects to compete was sent out there were Samuel Sachs, 60 Wall Street, Berthold Hochschild of the American Metal Company, 52 Broadway; Bendet Isaacs, Samuel Kridel, Johns Robertson, and Jacob Rossbach.

No one at the Montefiore Home would discuss the difficulty. Supt. Hausmann said any statement to be made would have to come from Mr. Hochschild, the Secretary of the board. Arthur D. Wolf, ex-Secretary of the board, said he had just returned from Europe and knew absolutely nothing about the break with the architects, as he had talked with none of the board since his arrival.

The new home is to be erected on a large plot of ground in the Bronx bounded on the west by Steuben Avenue, on the north by Gunhill Road, on the east by Woodlawn Avenue, and on the south by 210th Street.

WORK AMONG LUTHERANS.

Church Members Organize to Assist the Poor and Sick.

Lutherans of New York have entered upon organized work for the sick, the poor, the men out of jobs, and strangers, and look forward to the building of a hospital, to be known as the Lutheran Hospital, and to be especially for Lutheran poor, with privileges accorded to all who are deserving, and to the erection of one or more homes, to be known as Lutheran Hospices, for the entertainment and protection of Lutheran young men who are either here or who come to the city.

There has recently been formed a Lutheran Inner Mission Society of New York, with the Rev. Dr. J. J. Young, pastor of the old mother Church of St. John in Christopher Street, as President, and it has obtained as City Missionary the Rev. Dr. F. F. Buermeyer, who entered upon his duties this Summer. Thus far the institutions on the island have been visited and he has attempted some work in the city prisons and at Sing Sing. There has been much searching done among tenements for the poor, aged, sick, and lonely. The difficult task has been entered upon of restoring human strays, who have drifted away from home and church.

MRS. ALEXANDRE CHIEF HEIR.

Three Daughters Receive Only a Small Part of Their Father's Estate.

The will of John E. Alexandre, who died at Lenox, Mass., on Aug. 22, was filed in the Surrogates' office yesterday. In the petition accompanying the will the value of the estate is given as "over $10,000 personal property" and "over $10,000 real property."

To the widow, Helen Lispenard Alexandre, is left, however, $100,000 outright, together with the residence, 26 West Thirty-eighth Street. A bequest of $5,000 goes to St. Leo's Roman Catholic Church of New York, to be applied to any mortgage there may be upon the property. The residue of the estate is to be divided into two equal shares. One of these shares is left to the widow absolute. The other share is to be divided into three shares and the income paid to the three daughters.

MAURETANIA SEARCH BEYOND DOUBT NOW

Forcible Denials from Custom House Early in the Day Are Contradicted by Developments.

SURVEYOR HENRY ADMITS IT

Rackziewicz, His Deputy, Directed Inspectors to Ransack Cabins—Denial from Wall—Queer Mission Aboard.

C. C. Wall, Special Agent of the Treasury Department, on duty at the Custom House, New York, was angered yesterday when he got the morning newspapers and read about his going down the bay on a revenue cutter, boarding the incoming Cunarder Mauretania, and prosecuting a search of the staterooms to find out if the passengers had left behind them, in their eagerness to go ashore, evidence that they intended to smuggle goods into this port.

It was denied and then admitted at the Custom House that the staterooms had been inspected after the passengers had gone ashore, and also that six Inspectors had been assigned to do that work. But, according to the Custom House people, Wall had nothing whatever to do with it, neither had that branch of the service to which Collector Loeb gives personal attention. The whole thing, praise or blame, was placed on the shoulders of Gen. Nelson H. Henry, Surveyor of the Port, and John Rackziewicz, the Deputy Surveyor, who was in charge of the baggage examination on the Cunard pier Thursday night.

Gen. Henry admitted that he had authorized the search of the Mauretania, and Rackziewicz said that it was he, and not Wall, who had directed the six Inspectors to make it.

Positive as were the denials that the Mauretania had been searched, it was noticed in shipping circles, as the day grew older, that the denials became fainter. At first the printed story was characterized as an out and out falsehood. Then it was admitted that the staterooms had been searched, but that in doing so none of the passengers, who had decided to stay on board overnight, had been disturbed. It was explained that the detective Inspectors knocked on the doors, and when a voice from within showed the room was occupied the Inspectors moved on to the next cabin, leaving those occupied for an inspection after the occupants had left the ship. The staterooms that escaped inspection Thursday night were said by the customs officers to have been about seventy in number. They admitted that these seventy left overs were subjected to a search as soon as their occupants left them yesterday morning.

The Customs Agent Stirred.

There was issued at the Custom House, and given out in Collector Loeb's office, yesterday morning, this signed statement:

> The story that I saw this morning in the various newspapers, particularly in THE NEW YORK TIMES, is a falsehood from beginning to end. I went down on the revenue cutter last night and boarded the steamship Mauretania. I went directly to the dining room, was there engaged with the Deputy Collectors in looking over passengers' declarations, and when the steamer tied up at the dock and I noticed passengers leaving, I went upstairs and went directly off the steamer, and was either the first or second man to leave the boat. I never again during the whole course of the evening went back on board. I stayed at the Surveyor's desk nearly all of the time. I spoke to no passenger or to any reporter. I did not know that the rooms were being searched and had no men under me or other customs or special agents with me. I searched no passenger and knew nothing about it in any manner, shape or form until I read it in the morning papers. At 1 A. M. I left the dock without having even been in a stateroom or looked inside of one. I boarded the Mauretania to talk with a man whom I had met abroad last Winter, and who had promised to give me some information. I had no instructions from Collector Loeb or the department in regard to my business on the dock.

> C. C. WALL, Customs Agent.

What Wall Was Doing Aboard.

There was a story that emanated from customs sources to the effect that Mr. Wall had learned that a person had died in Europe some months ago and that a part of his estate consisted of jewels. Mr. Wall, it was said, had heard that the person who inherited the jewels was a passenger on the Mauretania and he had accordingly gone down the bay to see if the inherited precious stones were duly declared when the Mauretania arrived at New York. The jewels were properly declared, it was added, and so ended that story.

As for the search, which caused so much anguish in the Custom House, Gen. Henry and Mr. Rackziewicz said late in the afternoon, and some hours after the Wall statement was issued, that the story of the inspection was true and that its publication had probably terminated a very useful source of information that the customs service has heretofore utilized.

"For about seven days, now," said Gen. Henry, "we have been inspecting staterooms after the occupants had gone ashore, and in a number of cases we found evidence of smuggling and in every case the evidence bore fruit. Really, I cannot see anything wrong in inspecting a stateroom after the passengers are gone. However, I have called for a written report from the Inspectors who went through the Mauretania Thursday night, and those reports I expect to-morrow."

"Where are those six Inspectors today?" Gen. Henry was asked.

"We gave them a day off on account of their having worked last night," he answered.

Publicity Kills the Practice.

Rackziewicz was much upset over the publication.

"It has completely destroyed a most valuable field of information, by the use of which we were able to separate the sheep from the goats," he said.

"Do you mean by that that from now on nobody will be so careless as to leave evidence of any sort in his cabin?"

"Yes, that is what I mean," he answered.

"He will throw the evidence out of the portholes instead of on the floors now?"

"That is what I imagine he will do," was the reply.

It might be added that the search of the Mauretania Thursday night was not without results. On the floor of a cabin that had been occupied by a passenger named "Quan" was found a pasteboard box that bore the engraved name of the Paris jewelry house of S. A. Galoy Fils et Stahl. Mr. Quan was confronted with the box, and admitted that it had contained a cigarette case. The case was seized and sent to the Public Stores.

It might also be stated that Thursday night an effort was made to get the newspapers not to publish the account of the inspection, the reason advanced being that it would interfere with the secret work of the Customs Service. Capt. Roberts, Pier Superintendent of the Cunard Line, was asked to lend his support in getting the report "killed," but the details were published.

Despite denials, it is true that the Mauretania was thoroughly searched between the hours of 11 P. M. Thursday and 3 A. M. yesterday, and a passenger lost title to a cigarette case as a result.

Mrs. Mayme McKenzie, a passenger on the Mauretania, was unable to get her trunks through the Custom House yesterday because she had made no declaration of dutiable articles, and new gowns were found in her baggage, it was reported to Surveyor Henry by Customs Inspectors. The trunks were sent to the Appraiser's Warehouse and Mrs. McKenzie was notified to appear before Deputy Surveyor Smyth for a hearing to-day. Mrs. McKenzie had intended to leave for her home in Chicago when the steamer reached her pier.

PUZZLED BY A RIVER FIND.

A Bundle of Woman's Clothing Washes Ashore at Yonkers.

The Yonkers police are puzzled over the finding yesterday of a bundle of woman's clothing of the finest texture, which was washed ashore near the Fulton Boat Clubhouse. The garments, which comprise a rose-colored Princess gown, a white petticoat, a lace waist, and underclothing, were picked up by U. P. Driscoll, the two-mile indoor champion runner, and George Tracey of the boat club. There was no mark of any kind on the clothing.

A lookout is being maintained along the water front with the possibility in view of a body being found in the water. It is suggested the clothes may have been accidentally dropped by some woman who went in bathing from a boat.

NEWPORT, R. I., Aug. 26.—This evening Mr. and Mrs. T. Suffern Tailer entertained at one of the largest and prettiest gatherings of the Summer at their new home in Ochre Point and Ruggles Avenue known as Honeysuckle Lodge. The occasion was a house warming, celebrated by a dinner, a dance in the garage, songs by a colored quartet, and a display of fireworks. The estate, which Mr. and Mrs. Tailer purchased last year, has been transformed, and the beautiful home they have built upon it makes it one of the show places of Newport. The event also marked Mrs. Tailer's reappearance in society after the birth of a daughter less than two months ago.

Mr. and Mrs. Tailer received their guests in a picturesque hall of Louis XVI. appointments leading to a large staircase of Colonial design, and were assisted by Miss Laura Livingston, a débutante of this year, and daughter of Mrs. Robert R. Livingston.

The guests presently repaired to the garage, which had been laid with a new dancing floor and decorated with white hydrangeas. Outside the lawn fronting the lily pond, with the fountain playing and the flower beds illumined by 4,000 electric fairy lamps, made an engaging scene, the moonlight adding to its attraction.

DR. WEISSE TO WED AT 68.

His Second Bride Is Mrs. Mary Ripley, 61, an Author—Ceremony To-day.

Dr. Fanuell Dunkin Weisse, 68 years old, of 19 Gramercy Park, Dean of the New York College of Dentistry, and Mrs. Mary Ripley, 61 years old, an author, will be married this afternoon at the home of Mrs. Ripley's daughter, Mrs. Clarence Lewis, 122 East Thirtieth Street. The Rev. Dr. William Grosvenor, rector of the Church of the Incarnation, will officiate, and only a few friends will be present. The couple will leave at once on their honeymoon trip, but Dr. Weisse would not say last night where they were going.

This will be Dr. Weisse's second marriage. In 1872 he married Mary Elizabeth Suydam, daughter of Henry Suydam, a wealthy merchant of New York, and to the couple three children were born. One son, Fanuell Suydam Weisse, is a physician. A short time ago he married Margaret M. Young. They now live at 17 West Tenth Street. Henry Bethune and Eugenia Bethune Weisse live at 19 Gramercy Park with the elder Dr. Weisse.

Dr. Weisse was born in Watertown, Mass., in 1842. His career as a surgeon since his graduation from the Medical College of the University of New York in 1864 has been a brilliant one. He organized the American Veterinary College, and was for years President of its Board of Trustees. He is the founder of the New York Dermatological Society. Since 1897 he has been Dean of the New York College of Dentistry. He has written several textbooks on anatomy and has been a frequent contributor to medical journals.

WILLIAM JAMES DIES; GREAT PSYCHOLOGIST

Brother of Novelist and Foremost American Philosopher Was 68 Years Old.

LONG HARVARD PROFESSOR

Virtual Founder of Modern American Psychology, and Exponent of Pragmatism and Dabbled in Spooks.

CHOCORUA, N. H., Aug. 26.—Prof. William James of Harvard University, America's foremost philosophical writer, virtual founder of the modern school of psychology and exponent of pragmatism, died of heart disease to-day at his Summer home here.

Prof. James, who was 68 years old, had been in a critical condition since his arrival at Quebec from Europe a week ago. This morning he took a decided turn for the worse, lapsing into unconsciousness about noon. He died three hours later, surrounded by his wife, daughter, son, and his brother, Henry James, the author.

It was to be at the side of the sick bed of his brother Henry that Prof. James several months ago went abroad. He watched over his brother until he recovered, then the two made a joint tour through Europe. In one of the Continental cities Prof. James was attacked by heart disease. Treating the matter lightly, he continued his travels until his condition became more alarming, and he turned his steps homeward. With his brother he arrived at Quebec on Aug. 19. His son met him there and brought him immediately to his Summer home here.

During the week the attending physicians did not see any cause for immediate fears, although they told the family that their patient was very ill. This morning Prof. James complained of sever pains, and then gradually lapsed into unconsciousness.

Prof. James was an active member of the Faculty of Harvard University from 1872 to 1907, when he announced his retirement in order to devote himself to writing. A silver loving cup was given to him by the advanced sudents in philosophy when he met his classes for the last time on Jan. 22, 1907. It was announced then, however, that he was not severing his connection with the Faculty entirely, but would merely retire from his lecture room work.

The home of Prof. James was on Irving Street, in Old Cambridge, a stone's throw from the college yard. It was there that he wrote his "Principles of Psychology," which brought him much fame and became a standard text book for university use. It appeared in 1890, after twelve years of introspective experimentation upon the physiology of the mind. The book practically founded the modern science of psychology in America, although some experimental work had been done along the same line in Europe.

Prof. James was one of the group of men who came under the inspiring influence of Darwin's pupil, Louis Agassiz, who started him out in a career as a zoologist before his introspective turn of mind had led him into lines of mental investigation.

The early youth of Prof. James was spent in New York, where he was born Jan. 11, 1842. His father, Henry James, a Swedenborgian minister, and a well-known writer upon Swedenborg, was characterized by James Russell Lowell as "the best talker in America." The son was not physically strong as a youth, and was sent to England together with his brother, Henry James, Jr., the now famous novelist.

Upon returning to America in the early '60s young James entered the Lawrence Scientific School at Harvard. In 1865 he went to Brazil with the Agassiz expedition, and specialized in the study of plants and fishes. He decided, however, to abandon this study because, as he put it, he could never get through his "poor head the horribly long drawn-out designations." From the Scientific School he turned to medicine, being graduated from the Harvard Medical School with the degree of M. D. in 1870.

In 1872 Prof. James became instructor and later Assistant Professor of Comparative Anatomy and Physiology, a post which he retained until 1880. From 1880 to 1885 he was Assistant Professor of Philosophy; from 1885 to 1889 professor in the same department. He was Professor of Psychology from 1889 to 1897, and Professor of Philosophy from 1897 to 1907.

When he first took up his mental studies—it was about the time of his graduation in medicine—and began work as an independent investigator, a small ante-room adjoining a Harvard laboratory was furnished him, and there he collected sheep's heads and frogs and pursued his study of "physiological psychology." The result in a decade was his famous textbook.

In 1880 he wrote for The Atlantic Monthly "Great Men, Great Thoughts, and the Environment," and for a long time was a contributor to The International Journal of Ethics. He was President of the American Psychological Association and of the International Society for Psychical Research.

Upon his retirement from active teaching he took up a line of studies seeking "to find a balm for men's souls." He became the chief American advocate of "pragmatism," a trend in philosophical thought which holds that "that is true which works." On July 8 of last year he startled the scientific world by announcing that he had held communication with the spirit of the late Dr. Richard Hodgson. He made a report upon his supposed spiritual communication occupying more than 100 pages in the "Proceedings of the American for Psychical Research," much of the report consisting of alleged verbatim records of his spooky conversation.

"I await more facts," he said when questioned about his proofs that it was really Dr. Hodgson who spoke to him, "facts which may not point clearly to a conclusion for fifty or a hundred years."

The honorary degrees of Ph. D. and Litt. D. were bestowed upon Prof. James by Padua in 1893; he was made Doctor of Laws by Princeton in 1896; Edinburgh in 1902, and Harvard in 1905. He was Gifford lecturer on natural religion at the University of Edinburgh from 1899 to 1901; a corresponding member of the Institute of France, and of the Royal Prussian Academy of Science, and a member of the National Academy of Sciences.

AVIATOR POST IN THRILLING FLIGHT

Fails to Shut Off Motor and Narrowly Escapes Injury at Sheepshead Bay Track.

HURDLES THE COURSE FENCE

Mars Circles the Grounds at Height of 300 Feet, Showing Power of Control.

Thrills a-plenty were furnished the audience at the second aviation meet at the Sheepshead Bay race track yesterday when Augustus Post, the prominent clubman who has recently taken up aviation as a sport, made his first public appearance as an amateur flier. The other aviators, Mars, Ely, and McCurdy, who are participating in the meet, each made a number of flights, but no one event brought the audience to its feet except the flight made down the field by Post in his four-cylinder Curtiss biplane.

The other aviators had made a number of flights when Post's machine was wheeled out on the field and made ready for a trip. The wind had been blowing puffy all afternoon, but seemed to moderate, and the amateur took advantage of the lull. His machine is the Skylark, with which Mars made a reputation in the West as a daring aviator.

After receiving briefly the advice of the more experienced fliers as to how to meet the treacherous wind puffs and eddies, Post mounted his machine and the motor was started. With a run of 75 feet the machine mounted the air and was kept on an even keel at a height of about 10 feet from the ground, though it was tossed and played with by the swirling currents stirred up by the grand stand.

Near the end of the field the aviator turned his forward planes slightly downward to make a landing, still running his motor at full speed, and the wheels touched the ground on the incline of a small knoll in the field. This turned the front planes upward and the machine shot 50 feet into the air, the motor still keeping up its regular buzzing.

The upward spurt of his machine carried Post beyond the good landing place at the north end of the field, and he was forced to turn in the air, which he did, completing the shortest circle that has meen made on the field. He then attempted a landing on the turf course, and as the machine touched the ground, discovered that he was running rapidly toward the fence that separates the track from the infield. The wheels had already touched the ground, but the front planes were quickly elevated, and the fence was hurdled prettily. Another half turn brought the machine into the wind and a landing was made, the aeroplane stopping its final run along the ground within twenty feet of one of the hurdles that make landing in the infield dangerous.

When Mr. Post made his first spurt in the air after attempting a landing, the other aviators and spectators gathered at the far end of the field started to run toward him, as they expected he would meet with a mishap at almost any moment. Photographers in the centre of the infield also started in his direction, getting their instruments ready to take snaps, but before they progressed very far the amateur aviator had landed safely and had stepped from his machine to drag it to one side, out of the way. He was soon surrounded by a circle of anxious men.

That may have been all there was to it, but Mr. Post accomplished some of the most skillful and prettiest manoeuvres that have been seen on the field. In the grand stand and among the spectators on the field it was supposed that he had been unable for some reason to shut off his motor, but he denied this and said that with the exception of what perversities were caused by the unsteady wind he had the aeroplane under perfect control all the time.

Next to the début of Post the chief feature of the afternoon was the final flight made by Mars, which was an almost perfect demonstration of control. It was announced that Mars would try to make a speed record for a circular mile track, and then with a whirr the young aviator got into the air. He circled the track once, making the distance in a very few seconds over a minute, and then turning sharply, headed in the direction of Brighton Beach.

Mars found the wind too treacherous for a long flight, and turned after having gone about three miles from the grounds. It has been usual for the aviators at the end of each flight to land at one end of the field or the other, where the ground is smooth. Instead of adopting this plan Mars headed for the gateway through which the machines are taken from the infield, and, after a half-mile glide with his motor throttled, landed with his machine halfway through the gate, surprising even his mechanicians.

Mars had been the star of the afternoon, his more powerful biplane giving him the advantage over his fellow-participants. His longest flight was made at 6 o'clock, when he made four complete circuits of the field at a height of 300 feet from the ground, remaining in the air a little more than five minutes.

Ely was the first of the aviators to take the air, making a flight of a half mile straight away at an altitude of sixty feet before there was another machine on the field. Mars soon followed him into the air and made a circuit of the course, pitching and careening at the turns. Then came McCurdy for a straightaway flight the length of the field close to the ground. McCurdy's machine was equipped with the wireless apparatus which is to be tried out on one of the aeroplanes in the interest of the United States Signal Corps, but McCurdy had been in the air only a moment before he decided that any attempt to carry out the experiments yesterday would be impracticable, and the wireless tests were postponed to to-day.

Ely and Mars followed McCurdy with a straight away dash, in which Mars was given a handicap, because of the greater power of his motor, but succeeded in beating Ely to the other end of the field. Wind conditions were not favorable for contests of the sort, but later three machines were lined up at the scratch and started into the air together, Mars leading Ely and McCurdy easily.

Because of the unsteady wind, the model contests planned for yesterday afternoon were postponed until to-day, though several of the youthful entrants were on hand with their miniature fliers and tried them out in front of the grandstand.

HOXSEY MAKES OCEAN TRIP.

Wright Aviator Flies Over a Mile to Sea and Return.

ASBURY PARK, N. J., Aug. 26.—Archie Hoxsey gave a splendid cross-country flight to-day, journeying to Deal Beach and return to the aviation grounds at Interlaken Park. Because of the rain the meet was called off, and only a few persons were on the grounds to witness the best flight since the opening of the meet two weeks ago.

Hoxsey started in his machine shortly after 4 o'clock, and after circling the grounds headed for Deal in a drizzling rain. After flying over the golf links, Hoxsey swung around and sailed over the country place of Col. George B. Harvey. Encouraged by his success, Hoxsey returned to Asbury Park and made a long sweep oceanward. After traveling a mile over the ocean the daring aviator returned to land, continuing his flight over the Lafayette Hotel, the headquarters of the Wright aviators. He made a dip in acknowledgment of the cheering, and circled over the building. He returned to Interlaken after a trip lasting thirty minutes.

At times Hoxsey was 2,000 feet in the air, and seldom under 500. He was watched by thousands of seashore visitors when he went out to sea.

A couple of hours later Johnston made a flight. He circled the field for about ten minutes, and made short trips north and south. A special cross-country flight is set for to-morrow.

TWO $10,000 AERO PRIZES.

Special Awards for Altitude and Distance Records at Belmont Park.

With two $10,000 prizes, the programme of the International Aviation Tournament at Belmont Park race track the latter part of October will be complete. J. C. McCoy, Chairman of the Contest Committee of the meet, expects to be able to announce the donation of these prizes within the next few days, and at the same time the completion of the full list of events covering the tournament.

One of the prizes is to be offered for the first aviator competing in the international meet who shall reach an altitude of 10,000 feet during the tournament. The other will be awarded for the longest cross-country flight.

The world's record for altitude is now between 6,000 and 7,000 feet, and many aviators who have tried for the higher levels believe that the present type of flying machine will be unable to rise much above that mark. Others, and among them Wilbur Wright, are confident that before the end of the present year the height of 10,000 feet will be reached.

Many scientific problems are involved in the altitude trials of heavier-than-air machines, and there is no phase of human flight more interesting to the public or to the aviators than the efforts of the birdmen to rival balloons in climbing above the clouds.

One of the features of the meet will be cross-country flying. The determination on the part of the committee to make this feature a conspicuous one on the programme insures the possibility of record breaking performances. The second $10,000 prize will be offered for the longest flight from Belmont Park and return during the meet, and any aviator will be at liberty to leave the course at any time he pleases and fly in any direction he may choose. It is expected that with favorable weather new world's records will be made in both of these events.

WANT AVIATORS AT BOSTON.

Wilcox and Harkness Invited to the Harvard Meet.

Special to The New York Times.

HEMPSTEAD, L. I., N. Y., Aug. 26.—A message has been received here from Charles J. Glidden, inviting Philip Wilcox of New York and Harry S. Harkness of Cleveland, Ohio, to take part in the speed duration, slow lap, and bomb-throwing contests in the Harvard aviation meet next month. Clifford B. Harmon is named as the only amateur who has made an entry in these events in which cups are offered as prizes.

Wilcox said to-night he would accept the invitation if he could borrow a machine in which to fly. All that is left from the wreck of his own Farnham biplane occupies a few feet of space in a tent here.

John Kiley, secretary for Mr. Harkness, stated it was very doubtful if the aviator would go. In the first place, Kiley states, Mr. Harkness does not care to be restricted to an amateur class, and in the second place, it would take too long to take the Antoinette machine apart and reassemble it.

BALLOONISTS' MOONLIGHT TRIP.

Philadelphians Travel to South River, N. J., by Night.

New Brunswick, N. J., Aug. 26.—After an exciting balloon trip from Philadelphia Leo Stevens of New York and C. B. Graham and Arthur T. Atherholt, President of the Aero Club of Pennsylvania, to-day landed at a point near South River shortly before 5 o'clock this morning. In descending the anchor caught a live trolley wire, and several telephone wires were broken before the balloon was safely landed.

The trio started in the balloon Pennsylvania at 3:25 A. M. to-day. At the time of the start the moon was shining brightly and under the influence of a brisk wind the balloon quickly left Point Breeze Race Track in South Philadelphia. The balloon was followed by a train, which kept it in sight as far as Trenton, when it disappeared.

The stiff breeze carried the balloon along at times at the rate of fifty miles an hour. It drifted toward Raritan Bay, and as the lights of the South Amboy Lighthouse were seen the balloonists decided to land, fearing the airship would be carried out to sea. After some difficulty this was accomplished. The bag was shipped to New York for examination, and the basket sent to Philadelphia.

The trip was made under the auspices of the Aero Club of Pennsylvania, and it was intended to go to New York, but owing to the mist it was thought advisable not to risk being blown out to sea. The party returned to Philadelphia to-day.

YOUNG BURNETT GETTING WELL

Boy Injured by Aviator Brookins at Asbury Park Recovering.

PATERSON, N. J., Aug. 26.—George Burnett, the 13-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry C. Burnett of Paterson, was brought to this city to-day from Asbury Park, where he had been in a hospital for more than two weeks suffering from injuries received at the aviation meet at Interlaken Park, N. J.

Burnett was badly injured on the opening day of the meet when Brookins, one of the Wright aviators, nearly killed himself while descending in his airship. He lost control of the machine and half a dozen of the spectators were injured. Young Burnett was one of the first struck by the airship and was thought to be fatally injured. He was accompanied to this city by Dr. J. C. McCoy, his uncle, Dr. W. B. Johnson, and his father and mother. The lad stood the trip well, and Dr. Johnson said his nephew was as well as could be expected.

GALE DAMAGES AIRSHIP.

Nearly Carries Two Off at Atlantic—Dixon to Try 40-Mile Flight.

BOSTON, Aug. 26.—The two flying machines now assembled on the aviation field at Atlantic, where, from Sept. 3 to Sept. 13, the Harvard-Boston aero meet is to be held, were almost carried off to-day by a gale of wind during a heavy rainstorm. The machines, the Harvard I. aeroplane and the Pfitzner monoplane, were stripped of their covering, and the monoplane lost its wings.

Aviator H. F. Kearney of Missouri, who is to fly the Pfitzner monoplane, had expected to make his first flight to-day, but the storm forced him to abandon the attempt.

Cromwell Dixon, in his dirigible airship, says that on Tuesday he will try a flight from Boston to Plymouth, more than forty miles, landing as near Plymouth Rock as possible. Later he intends to folow Paul Revere's historic ride through Middlesex County, circle Bunker Hill Monument, manoeuvre over the Navy Yard at Charlestown and over the harbor, and drop imitation bombs.

OPEN DOOR MEN DROP WELLS

Southern Theatre Owner Accused of Violating Association's Booking Rule.

A special meeting of the Directors of the National Theatre Owners' Association was held yesterday at which Jake Wells, the head of the Leath & Wells theatrical interests in the South, was dropped from membership in the association and dispossessed of the franchises he held in the towns he represents.

This action of the Directors was taken through Mr. Wells's violation of one of the sections of the association's by-laws, which explicitly states that members of the association are required to make contracts with producing managers only, or their accredited representatives, provided that the representative does not represent more than two producing managers. According to officers of the association this by-law was established to prevent the creation of any monopoly in the business of booking companies of any sort.

Mr. Wells made a public statement a month or so ago announcing his determination to book the attractions of several producers through one booking firm, in contradiction to the by-laws of the association.

Mr. Wells was reported to be in the South last night, when an effort was made to see him in regard to the matter.

MOTION PICTURES ARE MADE TO TALK

RECORDS TAKEN TOGETHER

When the Pictured Man Acts the Voice in the Box Speaks, and Illusion Is Perfect.

Thomas A. Edison gave to an audience of not more than a dozen men last night the first exhibition of his talking pictures, the product of the new Edison kinetophone, which combines in one machine the wizardry of the phonograph with that of the kinetoscope. The brief glimpse offered in the laboratory in West Orange was enough to show that Mr. Edison has achieved what he and a host of other inventors have long striven for—the perfect synchronization of sound and action for the moving picture screen.

Into the scene thrown upon the screen last night a man walked, and as his lips moved the sound of his voice issued from the concealed phonograph, effecting an illusion that was perfect. This was all that Mr. Edison would show, but he has more in preparation, and his plans for the future of his kinetoscope are boundless.

"We'll be ready for the moving-picture shows in a couple of months," he said, "but I am not satisfied with that. I want to give grand opera, I want to have people in far stranded towns able to hear and see John Drew. And," he added in a burst of confidence, "I want to have 'Teddy'" addressing a meeting."

But these things are not yet. A year or more Mr. Edison allows for their achievement. Already he has an ambitious drama reproduced on a long film, but there are flaws in one or two places, and he is unwilling to show the play. The kinetophone as it now stands is the product of two years' labor, which Mr. Edison has shared with his assistant, Mr. Hyams.

One Operator Does It All.

It is one machine, part phonograph, part kinetoscope, and it requires but one operator. From the projecting machine behind the audience, wires run along the ceiling to the screen, behind which stands the phonograph. The two parts are operated by the turning of the handle beside the kinetoscope portion.

In the newly perfected process the records and pictures are taken at the same time, a sufficiently sensitive record having been devised to catch and retain the slightest sound accompanying the portrayed action. Here has been the stumbling block in the effort to accomplish the result. Hitherto the pictures and records had to be taken separately, in the face of the difficulty of recording in the form the voices of the actors, and at the same time, having them move freely and, as far as possible, dramatically around in an unobstructed range of the camera. The special recorder used for the kinetophone permits of the speaker being twenty feet away.

A little platform with a lecturer's table and back screen was the picture last night. On the screen was flashed a fairly impressive man in a frock coat, who explained the points of the kinetoscope. There was no flaw in the illusion. It seemed to be talking. The sound of the working of the concealed phonograph could not be detected four feet away. To demonstrate its possibilities the gentleman on the screen bounced an iron ball on the floor. There was an accompanying noise. He carelessly dropped a plate with a resounding smash. He pounded with a mallet, and finally tooted an automobile horn with uncanny effect.

There is another little feature of the combination on which the inventor has been working as a side issue. He hopes soon to have the pictures reproduce the natural color of the originals.

In honor of his audience, made up largely of newspaper men, the first picture shown last night, of the old and silent type, was entitled "The Big Scoop," a drama of a metropolitan newspaper." It was all about a young and handsome reporter, who had been discharged, regaining his prestige by overhearing prominent bank officials discussing highly important matters in a restaurant. The bank was going to close its doors in the morning and his paper made an unpleasant point of it all over the front page. No one seemed to mind this so much as Mr. Edison himself. He fairly beamed as the handsome young reporter went home and told his mother all about it.

The inventor takes immense satisfaction in watching moving pictures, and never seems to tire of them.

SINGERS SAIL FOR MEXICO.

They Will Give Opera at the Capital Under Government Guarantee.

A special steamer of the Ward Line departed from Pier 14 yesterday at 3 o'clock bound for Vera Cruz with the members of the National Opera Company, who are to sing in the City of Mexico next month. As the journey occupies a week the second cabin of the boat has been fitted up as a rehearsal room and the singers will go over the operas together on the voyage.

They are to give twenty-four performances in the City of Mexico under arrangement with the Mexican Government, which has deposited $50,000 in gold to guarantee the performances at the Arbeu Theatre.

This is the first time that a steamer has been chartered to convey an entire opera company for so long a journey. Among the singers who sailed were Mmes. Jane Noria, Louisa Villani, La Salle-Rabinoff, Amelia Sedelmayer, Rose Olitzka Maria Claessens, and Messrs. Martin, Fornari, and a dozen others. Miss Rita Fornia and some others of the company intend to make the journey by train.

"MOTHER" FOR THE HACKETT

W. A. Brady Will Present Jules Eckert Goodman's Play on Labor Day.

Instead of moving to the Comedy Theatre when "Madame X" comes to the Lyric on Sept. 5 Louis Mann will go on tour in "The Cheater" and his wife, Clara Lipman, will fill the time at the Comedy in "The Marriage of a Star." This shift has been made in order that William A. Brady's production of Jules Eckert Goodman's play, "Mother," may be given its first New York hearing at the Hackett Theatre on Labor Day, according to plans made last Summer.

"Mother" was presented in Chicago last Spring, and its reception there has made Mr. Brady desirous of producing it in New York as soon as possible. Emma Dunn will have the title rôle, a part she originated in the Chicago production.

Actress Wins Stocking Darning Prize.

Members of several musical comedy companies, accompanied by Marie Dressler and Lew Fields, went to the Household Show at Madison Square Garden yesterday afternoon and participated in various contests arranged to show their housewifely skill. Isabelle Jason and Vivian Rogers, both of "Tilly's Nightmare" company, won the ironing contest, decided by Charley Gong, a laundryman from Doyers Street. Mabel d'Elmar of "The Summer Widowers" got the prize for the best stocking darner, using a sewing machine. Norma Thomas of "The Echo" company had her picture taken in the wire cage of bees with the beekeeper and came out of it uninjured. To-night the management of the show will give a complete collection of household supplies to any couple that will be married in the Garden.

"My Man" Presented.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Aug. 26.—Frederic Thompson's company, headed by Mabel Taliaferro, produced the new drama "My Man" at the Grand Opera House to-night. The piece is a dramatized version of Forrest Halsey's story, "The Quality of Mercy," and is by Edith Ellis. The company included Anna Suthland, Campbell Gollan, Anna Wynne, and Annette Frank. Edna Brothers was originally cast in the leading rôle, but her illness made it necessary for Mrs. Frederic Thompson (Mabel Taliaferro) to take her place temporarily.

AMUSEMENT NOTES.

Maude Odell has been engaged by Henry W. Savage for the role of Sally von Scheffel in Oliver Herford's version of "Theodore & Co.," which is to be called in the American production "Con & Co."

Helen Ware will to-morrow begin rehearsals of "The Deserters," the new play by Robert Peyton Carter and Anna Alice Chapin, in which she is to be starred by Henry B. Harris this season.

Dick Bernard, a brother of Sam Bernard, has been engaged by Lew Fields to appear on tour in "The Girl Behind the Counter," the piece in which Mr. Fields starred two seasons ago.

George Loane Tucker has been engaged by Joseph M. Weber for the comedy role of Picquard, the detective, in "Alma, Wo Wohnst Du?" which opens at Weber's Theatre on Sept. 26.

Blanche Ring began her second season in "The Yankee Girl" at the Casino, Asbury Park, last night. After playing the principal Eastern cities Miss Ring will make a tour to the Pacific Coast and through the Southwest.

The company to support Bertha Kalich in "The Woman of To-day" has been completed, and includes Charles Millward, Isabel Damon, John Findlay, Francis Nordstrom, Earl Ryder, Edward McWade, Emily Wakeman, William Henderson, J. K. Hutchison, Harry L. Barker, Frederick Roberts, Joseph F. Winter, Mathilde Boring, and Frank Dawson.

A dress rehearsal of "The Upstart" was held last night at Maxine Elliott's Theatre. The company will go to New Haven Sunday night for two performances there before opening in New York on Thursday night.

Catherine Countiss will be starred by Stair & Havlin in "The Awakening of Helena Ritchie." She will open at the Majestic Theatre, Brooklyn, on Sept. 12, and her tour will be arranged so as not to conflict with that of Margaret Anglin, who will continue in the play until the first of the year.

MILLIONAIRE GIVERS CRITICISED BY TAFT

More of Their Bounty Should Go for Negro Education, the President Thinks.

TO END SOUTH'S PROBLEM

When Negroes Become Skilled Workmen the Community Will See That They Are Protected.

BEVERLY, Mass., Aug. 26.—Criticism of millionaires for giving much elsewhere and little to the cause of the education of the negro was uttered by President Taft to-day. He spoke at a meeting of the Trustees of Hampton Institute at the home of Mrs. Robert J. Bradley at Pride's Crossing.

"I am not a millionaire, and I have never had the feelings of one, but some times one's imagination takes life and you wonder what you would do if you had an income of $5,000,000 or $10,000,000 a year, and had the ordinary feelings of a man who wished to help his fellow-men. It seems to me that one would like about first to find those things to which he could be certain he might give his money and get a return of good to human kind; and in looking about I am very sure that he could not find place in which he could, for the benefit of human kind, invest his money with more certainty of returns than in Hampton Institute.

"I think it does not speak quite well for all the gentlemen who are contributing generously to various causes that the head of an institution like Hampton, which is the beginning of a great movement to solve the race question in this country, should be obliged to go about seeking $100,000 a year, and take a burden on himself that nobody appreciates until he has had to get that money in this way. One hundred thousand dollars a year is the income on a certain number of millions, and Hampton ought to have had those millions long ago in order that the head of the institution—and it is the same with Tuskegee as with Hampton—may not waste his life in raising the money, but may devote his attention to the good which he can do in carrying on such a school and making it more efficient.

"Hampton has done more than merely solve the race question in the proper way. It furnished to the American educator a type of school that is now spreading throughout the country. Gen. Armstrong was the first one to put into practical operation an industrial school that did the work that these schools were intended to do. It does seem strange, and it certainly is interesting, that it required the solution of the problem of the education of the negro to present to the white educators the best methods of educating the whites.

"Education is the solution of the race question when it is directed toward giving the negro a self-respect and a belief in the dignity of labor, and in the necessity for his making himself a valuable member of the community in order that the white men may then give him what is his due. When a man is a valuable member of a community as a laborer, as a skilled laborer, and one who builds up the industries of the community, then he will get all the rights that are coming to him.

"I do not like to go into politics, or to discuss the fact, but I do believe that the present situation in the South is one full of hope for the solution of the negro question, because politics is largely out of it. Now the Southern white man and the Northern white man, and the Southern negro and the Northern negro are all uniting in this movement to teach the 10,000,000 negroes how to support themselves, how to support the community in which they live, and when their value in the community is demonstrated, as it is being demonstrated, the race question will have its solution. No one can read the lectures that Booker Washington has delivered to his own people without realizing that he is one of the greatest men of this century, and that he dares tell them the truth in order that they may begin to build up their lives on a sure foundation."

Clark Wins Chess Masters' Tourney.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Aug. 26.—The Congress of the New York State Chess Association ended to-night with two games at the local club. John L. Clark of Boston was declared winner of the masters' tourney, while R. T. Black of Brooklyn, H. G. Daniel, and G. H. Walcott of Boston divided the second and third prizes.

First prize in Class A of the general tourney went to D. F. Searle of Rome, N. Y., while the second prize was divided between Dr. P. B. Lepper of Boston and D. W. Waller of Seneca Falls, N. Y.

VOCATION AS THE END AND MEASURE OF YOUTH'S LIFE

Civilization Has Set Everybody to Work, But She Has Classified Him According to His Particular Kind of Work.

By Dr. JOHN H. FINLEY,
President of the College of the City of New York.

THE eminent President of one of our leading institutions not long ago tersely phrased the title of an address, "Make the man fit the job." It is an injunction which many wish to make permanent in educational theory and practice in this Republic, and it is difficult to resist, but I should present, if I could, the young, jobless idealists in whom the colleges try to make the highest desires incarnate, as my best argument for its dismissal; and I have no doubt of the decision, when the testimony of their lives is all in, (as it will not be for forty or fifty years, if ever,) for I believe that their contribution to the city and Nation and world and their own being is to be far beyond any that would have come if they had missed the thorough and broad teaching and had not caught into their torches the fire from this high altar.

But I cannot wait for this evidence. I would reach the younger brothers to-day, that precious, noisy multitude whose voices one speaks of hearing, as all we ought to hear them, rising clear above the war roar of industrialism and the prudent counsels of commerce, the voices of "wistful, overconfident creatures" crying through our streets: "With us all things are possible." I can hardly keep myself from stopping many a one of them every day, as I have often done, and saying: "But all things will soon cease to be possible unless you keep struggling toward the impossible, unless you fit yourself for something more than your little task or job. Some day your all-conquering dreams will wither to the size of that little daily task." The other day I sat by a boy in the Subway, a boy who said his name was a synonym in his father's language for the place of disaster. I saw the all-ambitious light in his eye, but he told me his plans and I saw the light dim into that of a candle not that I would keep him from the vocation, but because I wanted to see him a man first.

And then I find myself turning to the great o'ershadowing, environing, conventionalizing society and saying: "Why do you make vocation the end and the measure of the life of these youth?" For it seems quite as that ancient cosmic theory of the universe, which made the sun and stars revolve around the earth, now seems to the astronomer on our tower.

To be sure, the man has always seemed to revolve around the job, just as the sun always appeared to revolve around the earth. Our first ancestor of Scripture record, emerging from savagery, as it is now interpreted, found his life circling as regularly as the sun about the tasks of a vocation, a vocation for which preparation is now had, not in a paradise of natural history and leisure, but in a study of soils and silos and crops. And his descendants had not passed seven generations before they were divided into cattlemen, musicians, and incipient engineers; for the record runs that Lamech, the grandson of Adam five times removed, had three sons—Jabal, Jubal, and Tubal—Jabal, the father of those who dwell in tents and have cattle; Jubal the father of all that handle the harp and the organ, and Tubal, the inventor of every cutting instrument of brass and iron. So soon did the Ptolemaic geocentric theory of the universe become the ergocentric, that is, the job-centred, theory of human life on the earth.

To-day, not to speak of intervening centuries, turn to the modern biographical dictionary in the library or Who's Who in the office and you find that James Jones Jabal is set down, not as a man of certain character, but as a meat packer; that John Jubal is identified not as a man of masterful or kindly soul, but as an educator, and that Thomas Tubal is not listed at all, being a mechanic. The first question we ask concerning any man is "Who is he?" and concerning a boy, "What is he to be?" and the answer tells us that the man is or the boy is to be a banker, a farmer, a doctor, an electrical engineer, a broker, a motorman. The vocation identifies the man and fixes his place in the social organization, even in a democracy. And if he is not so identified it is generally because he is a poet, an idler, a vagrant, an almoner, a lunatic. Civilization has set everybody to work, (which is all well enough,) but she has also been insistent upon classifying or stratifying him according to the particular kind of work that he does, (which is not well enough.)

And it is because civilization, and especially in its older settled communities, is guided by the external appearances and accidents of men. It teaches the educational and social astronomy of the ancient son of Sirach as it was uttered thousands of years ago. "How shall he become wise that holdeth a plow, that glorieth in the shaft of the goad, that driveth oxen and is occupied in their labors. He will set his heart upon his furrows" . . . "So is every artificer. So is the smith sitting by the anvil and considering the unwrought iron . . . so is the potter . . . all these put their tasks in their hands. Without these shall not a city be inhabited," "they shall maintain in the fabric of the world and in the handiwork of their craft is their prayer," "but they shall not be sought for in the council of the people." "Not so he that hath applied his soul and meditateth in the law of the Most High." It is as if he said the application of the soul or the intellect and the meditation on the laws of life and of the universe are not for him who is to put his trust in his hands or to become wise in his works. He is to merely consider the unwrought iron, "to discourse of the stock of bulls," and to "bend the strength of the clay in front of his feet." The sky of his life is to be like the Ptolemaic hollow spheres that but carry light in their diurnal revolutions for his particular job, which in these days has become so minute and monotonous a process as to rob him even of the joy of his handiwork, and of all heart for "perfecting his works." And it is against this theory of education in a democracy that I speak through you.

It is true that the sun gives no more light, direct light, under our Copernican system than it did in the old Ptolemaic days. But what a boundless universe has been opened to man by having his little earth put where it really belongs. And how indirect light has been multiplied a million fold and carried even into the night by a knowledge of the laws that have sprung from the heliocentric theory. And whether you put the job or the man at the centre of your social or educational system, whether you think of him as an industrial productive unit or as a spiritual force, the world's work has still to be done. The anthropocentric theory of life does not reduce it except to eliminate that which is vain and futile in any sane mode of life. But what a different world and a different work it becomes when the man or woman or the boy or girl becomes the centre instead of the iron that has to be wrought, or the clay that has to be molded or the cattle that have to be herded or the millions of trinkets and useless things that have to be manufactured that we may not be surpassed by some other country in trade.

In the plans for industrial training which are now arousing so much favorable interest, this must be made and kept the cardinal principle. The man and not the product must be put first.

Our college graduates should go forth as Copernicans. They come into communication with other worlds, they touch the things of all life, the eternal. They become citizens of the universe. They go out where this theory is not so generally held, where the vocation is the life, for millions. They will be tempted, even of pain perhaps, to give up their theory. I could almost wish that they might not easily find vocations, that the stuff in them may be more fiercely tested. And if the vocational adjustment is not immediately made, it is not to be assumed, as it generally is, that the fault is with the training that gives one the Copernican view of life.

But if they be true Copernicans they will not be afraid of any honest vocation. I heard President Roosevelt say long ago that if any man of his regiment had asked to be favored because he was a college man, he would have had him discharged forthwith. The privileges that their degree gives them are to take the hardest jobs, and the immunities to be free of the selfish ones. It is for the men of such training and theory of life to glorify every vocation that their hands touch, even as the sun glorifies every planet or satellite or even nebulous ring of a duty that it shines upon.

I wrote to William James, the philosopher, recently after reading an essay of his on the Moral Equivalent of War, to say that I hoped to raise in my college a regiment for his great army, and I should like to send it forth as the first company, a hundred men—not conscripts, as he suggests, but volunteers, owned by an ideal "as the soldiers are owned by an army"—a hundred men who feel that it is worth a blood tax to belong to what he calls a "collectively" superior in any ideal aspect. And as he would have those of the luxurious classes conscripted to know "the sour and hard foundations of the higher life," to be sent to the coal and iron mines, to freight trains, to fishing fleets, to dishwashing, clothes washing, and window washing, to road building and tunnel building, to foundries and stoke holes, to the frames of skyscrapers; so would I have all college graduates conscripted by their ideals to give themselves as a soldier gives himself in self-forgetfulness, with the soldier's faith, in the campaign against conditions which have compelled so many to narrow, gray, comfortless, and all but hopeless lives. If war were declared in a good cause to-day and they were needed they would throw aside academic gowns and enlist at once. In that same spirit should they put off their gowns and war against nature.

So far from discouraging college graduates from entering those vocations which are not yet known as professions, because they are still pursued wholly or generally for gain and selfish good, I would have them make whatever they find fit them in their largest selves, and so make it become ennobled to the height and breadth of the spirit which attacks it.

My thesis is "Make the Job Fit the Man." The city smiled a few days ago over the report that a rat catcher conversed with the Mayor of the city about the teachings of an ancient philosopher. And you will perhaps smile when I tell you that of all the words written or spoken to me about the addresses that I have made in the past at the City College those which have revealed the keenest appreciation of what I have tried to say come from a barber—an Italian barber, a son of the people of Cicero and Dante and Raphael and Michael Angelo. I have recently been reading with great delight the letters of Petrarch to classical writers dead long before his time, Virgil, Cicero, Horace, and others, collected and translated by one of our instructors, but I have felt that the dead writers of the past were speaking to me in the voice of this, their living representative, who exclaims, "Ite ad America," meaning by America, I think, not a place where one can earn a livelihood by barbering, but a place where life is more than barbering—more than the vocation.

But if one smile contemptuously or good-naturedly at the learned rat catcher who reads the classics and at the barber who sends me with his letter for my reading a copy of Sir John Lubbock's "Pleasures of Life," my answer is that they, super-vocationalists, are probably having more happiness in living than the hypercritical, overpractical sub-man (as contrasted with superman) to whom life is measured in "ergons," that is, in units of material productivity.

And the college is not to forget that it has, as President Lowell of Harvard says a great work to do for the American people—that it is "an institution which can give a freedom of thought, a breadth of outlook, and a training for citizenship which no other institution in this country can give." It should not be affrighted into narrowness or mere ergocentric efficiency, by the Ptolemaic philosophy of life.

I think often of the conversation between the Bishop of Blougram and Gigadibs in the well-known "Apology" by Browning. "We are two college friends, suppose," says the Bishop.

We mortals cross the ocean of the world
Each in the cabin of a life.

And then they debate what one should take with him on such a journey even as we discuss our college curriculum from year to year. You make, says the Bishop, your landsman's list, "a piano forte, all Balzac's novels, the little Greek books they get up so beautifully in Leipsic, a framed Corregio's 'fleeting glow,'" only to hear the practical man of the sea, the agent or the captain cry "Your cabin's six feet square," as if to say "There's room for none of these things, Greek, literature, art—for nothing save your bare sea-furniture."

But if one has heard of the contents of a library carried by a certain traveler into the heart of Africa and have read even the titles of the books he has read "crossing the ocean of the world," one will not take the advice of the practical man, but will push past him, knowing that even in the busiest life, that is, even in the smallest surplus of cabin, there is room for aesthetics, love of music, Greek and French, history and science. "The White Knight," in a certain story, starting on a long journey took a mousetrap lest he should be troubled by mice at night, and a beehive thinking that he might come upon a swarm of bees. It is such and other anxious, thoughtful-of-the-morrow furniture that often takes the space we might give to the Corregio and the pig-skin library.

Our great citizen returning from the forests and the ancient seats of civilization and learning has made me look after him with increasing wonderment at the achievement of a vocationless man, (for we remember with difficulty what his particular vocation was.) But to my young men of the college my thoughts come back with a desire not only of bringing all that is added to my own experience, but of finding something to answer the need of that disturbing city, that "collectivity," as William James would call it, which is superior in the aspiration at least expressed through this college; of finding in them the common multiple of all we have desired for them in these years. They go, carrying in them a part of ourselves, and I think of them as a certain poet once said of them:

Ye shall hear from them country mine,
Hewers and builders, captains of men,
Thinkers, poets divine.

For hewers or poets they will carry the strength and vision of men and to these the task will be fitted.

Stocks Make Sharp Recovery—Call Money Rates, 1¼@1½ Per Cent.

CASH LOSSES BY THE BANKS

Decline in Corn on Absence of Frost in Corn Belt—Money Rates Firmer Here, but Easier in London.

An advance as vigorous and as general as had been any of the declines on previous days of the week took place on the Stock Exchange yesterday, but at the same time transactions were reduced much below the moderate total recorded the previous day. When prices rose the transactions became intermittent, and for an hour or two during the middle of the day the market was practically at a standstill, but some slight increase in activity accompanied a further rise during the afternoon and the upward movement continued up to the close of the market. Among the day's net gains were such advances as 2⅜ in Reading, 2⅛ in Union Pacific, 1⅞ in Southern Pacific, 1⅜ in United States Steel and a number of other net advances of a point or more, with the exceptionally large net gain of 2¾ points in Consolidated Gas. So far as the movement of prices took its inspiration from any of the day's developments the advance was prompted principally by the failure of the prediction of frosts in the corn belt, to materialize which favorable development was reflected in a fairly sharp decline in the price of corn and a sympathetic recession in wheat. In another direction, however, a less favorable development was presented in the shape of an increase in the demands upon the New York banks for cash, including another shipment of $500,000 gold to Canada, the transfer of $150,000 to New Orleans and the loss of $784,000 to the Sub-Treasury on the banks' transactions with that institution. The preliminary estimates of the net results of the week's currency movements, in which the losses to the interior and to the Sub-Treasury were partially offset by the receipt of gold from abroad, indicated a loss in cash by the banks of between $700,000 and $1,500,000. The failure, however, of last week's estimates to reflect at all accurately the actual changes in the cash holdings of the banks caused yesterday's estimates to be accepted with more than usual reserve. The tendency of the time money rates here was still toward increased firmness, while in London discount rates were slightly lower. Sterling exchange again declined 5 points.

CONSOLIDATED EXCHANGE.

Friday.

Failure of the frost scare of Thursday to eventuate in the corn belt reassured market sentiment on the Consolidated Stock Exchange, and started a retreat of the shorts that was rapid at times during the session. There was also commission house buying for long account on a moderate scale. Taken as a whole, however, the market was very professional, with not much evidence of increased public interest. Transactions totaled 57,790 shares, with but thirty-six different stocks making up the trading list for the day.

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 26.—In one of the dullest sessions of the Summer, local stocks fluctuated within narrow limits to-day and, aside from a rise of about 2 points in Lehigh Valley, the arbitrage group was responsible for what little spasmodic activity there was.

OUTSIDE SECURITIES

Stronger Tone and More Active Trading Characterize the Curb Market.

MANY SUBSTANTIAL GAINS

Goldfield Consolidated Suddenly Active, but Closes Even with the Opening Level.

The Curb market reflected yesterday the better tone on the Stock Exchange, and there were few issues which did not show gains at the close. The feature of the trading was a recurrence of the activity in Goldfield Consolidated, which in contrast to the light trading in that issue during recent months showed transactions of 14,500 shares. The price ranged between 7 15-16 and 8 5-16, the close being even with the opening at 8⅛. Kerr Lake continued to show strength and moved up from 6 15-16 to 7 5-16. The close, after reported sales of 3,000, was at 7⅛. Intercontinental Rubber was active and strong. The price moved up from 25 to 26½.

THE EUROPEAN MARKETS.

London Occupied with Mining Settlement—Paris Trading Dull.

LONDON, Aug. 26.—Money was in moderate supply to-day. Discount rates remain firm in anticipation of foreign gold withdrawals.

Traders on the Stock Exchange were mostly occupied with the mining settlement. Home railways were irregular and foreign securities quiet, while rubber shares hardened and Kaffirs declined slightly.

American securities opened quiet and a fraction above parity. Later the market advanced on more favorable crop news and closed steady. Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé and the Pacific stocks were the features.

Bar silver steady, 24⅜d per ounce.

Money, 2¼@2½ per cent.

The rate of discount in the open market for short bills is 3@3⅛ per cent.; for three months' bills, 3⅛@3 3-16 per cent.

PARIS, Aug. 26.—Trading was dull, but prices were firm on the Bourse to-day.

At closing, 3 per cent. rentes were 97 francs 30 centimes for the account.

Exchange on London, 25 francs 25 centimes for checks.

BERLIN, Aug. 26.—On the Boerse today domestic shares were firm, but American securities were slightly lower.

CONDITIONS OF TRADE.

Commenting on general trade conditions, Dun's Review says:

Crop prospects are improving. Business confidence is strengthened as the harvests are being gathered, and the period of the midsummer inaction draws to a close. On the other hand, renewed political activity makes for that uncertainty that tends to retard enterprise. That there has been and still is contraction in a number of important lines cannot be denied. But the contraction consists mainly in the cutting off of transactions for the future. There still remains the great business of supplying current needs; and reports from leading trade centres indicate that this business is beginning to expand as the Fall season approaches and the harvests are assured.

Bradstreet's says:

House trade continues to expand at leading markets, food crop advices are more favorable, iron and steel trade reports display a better undertone, the movement of wheat is heavy, buyers' excursions are general, and collections show a little improvement. However, the general situation remains rather irregular, in that current trade reports the country over are not uniformly favorable.

Weekly Failure Report.

Bradstreet's reports 235 failures in the United States during the week, against 222 for the previous week and 201, 236, 167, and 138 for the corresponding weeks of 1909 to 1906. The Middle States had 71, New England 31, Southern 49, Western 47, Northwestern 3, Far West 34, and Territories 0. Canada had 35, against 26 for the preceding week.

About 87 per cent. of the total number of concerns failing had capital of $5,000 or less and 8 per cent. had from $5,000 to $20,000 capital.

LIVINGSTONE WINS WITH NATIONAL CAR

Captures Illinois Trophy Race of 203.35 Miles on New Elgin Course.

ELGIN, Ill., Aug. 26.—Out of a potpourri of road races over the new 8½-mile Elgin course to-day three drivers and three cars emerged with distinguished honors. A. Livingstone, spinning a mile a minute for 203.35 miles, won the major event, the Illinois trophy, with a National. C. D. Buck, who drove half of his race with one spring suspension broken, captured the Kane County trophy, covering the 169.46 miles in 3:04:15.79. A. Hearne, who drove his own entry, a Benz, in the small car contest, took the Fox River trophy. His time for the 135.57 miles was 2:30:4.35.

Livingstone averaged 60.6 per hour. Buck, 55 miles, and Hearne, 54. The pilot of the National made the entire trip without stopping. Hearne was similarly fortunate. Buck stopped for a short time when his spring suspension broke.

Ned Crane suffered a heart-breaking experience. His Staver-Chicago car had consistently worked from fourth place to second, for which place he had a lead over Miller, the Warren-Detroit pilot. On the fifteenth lap, with only one more to go, the machine was disqualified because, as Starter Wagner explained, Crane's mechanician had failed to look behind him to see if it were necessary to make way for some driver desiring to pass him. Greiner, driving a National, was the man immediately behind, and he had to swerve quickly to avoid hitting the Staver-Chicago car.

There was but one accident, and that not serious. W. Fritsche, who was at the wheel of a Cino, skidded into a ditch and wrenched his shoulder. The mechanician also was slightly hurt. A motor ambulance made fast time in keeping away from the racers while taking the injured man down the course to the Emergency Hospital.

A crowd estimated at from 50,000 to 75,000 persons saw the contests. They began arriving at dawn, and by the time the sun had taken the frost out of the atmosphere they filled the stands and parking spaces. The attendance and the speed of the road, which surprised even the most sanguine, and believed to assure the annual renewal of the races.

The three contests were run simultaneously, which made hard work for the scorers. The latter, who had to figure the elapsed time, were anywhere from five to ten laps behind on their time. The small car race was nearly over before figures on the fifth lap—the first third of the race—were available.

Fred J. Wagner, who starts all the big races, sent the first car away at 10 o'clock. Fifteen cars entered for the Illinois and Kane County trophies faced the tape and were sent away at intervals of thirty seconds. Before the last man had sped away the first one to start, Livingstone, had nearly completed the first lap. Twenty minutes later the Fox River trophy cars were started. As they could not line up in the road they were sent away from the platform in front of the repair pits.

Great interest centred in the big race. Livingstone started in the lead and was never headed. He gained a little each lap, and at the finish was nearly thirteen miles ahead of the field. After the race he said that he had not pressed his machine during the last six laps. He saw that he had the race in hand, and remained content with avoiding any unnecessary strain on the machine. Greiner's car was the counterpart of Livingstone's, but the former lost a lap and a half when his gasoline feed pipe broke. He finished fourth, in 3:42:15.31, or 21:07.10 behind the winner.

Dawson, who drove a Marmon, and Pearce, piloting a Falcar, battled for second place during the greater part of the race. Pearce secured this position in the fifth lap and held it for fifty-six miles. On the twelfth lap he dropped to fourth place, Gelnaw, a Falcar driver, and Dawson passing him. The next round saw him back again.

In the Kane County trophy race, Driver Schoeneck was compelled by a breakage to withdraw before half the distance had been covered. C. Cheney's Staver-Chicago was disabled after covering forty miles in the small car race. Summaries:

Cleveland Has A. A. U. Commissioner.

Since the organization of the Cleveland Athletic Club at Cleveland, Ohio, big strides have been made in the booming of amateur athletics in that city, and now that George A. Schneider, Secretary of the Cleveland Athletic Club, has been appointed Commissioner for the Forest City of the Amateur Athletic Union, more progress is expected to be made in the future. Efforts will be made to bring about meets in that city which before long will compare favorably with the largest athletic carnivals of the country. The Cleveland Athletic Club is already planning to conduct a set of games next year that will be of National importance. It is the intention to secure if possible the presence of most all of the famous athletes of the country.

New Scooter Club at Great River, L. I.

A scooter club has been organized at Great River, L. I., and next Winter the new organization plans to put forth something novel and exciting in racing over ice and water. The scooter is a combination ice and water craft. It is fitted with sleighing runners which curve upward at the bows. On Great South Bay, where the club holds its races, there are often wide patches of water that have not frozen over. The scooter leaves the ice and sails through the water, sliding on to the ice at the other side of the opening. Among the incorporators of the new club are P. F. Burns of this city, Nat Rowe, Patchogue, L. I., inventor of the auto-scooter; S. B. MacClinton, J. B. Enderby, and Jess Dandy of this city. New club quarters are being built at Great River, and a number of orders have been placed for new scooting craft.

To Play for Tri-City Baseball Title.

Arrangements for the Tri-City series of amateur baseball games between New York, Washington, and Philadelphia, which will be played in September, have practically been completed. The champion nine of the Interborough League will uphold the interests of New York. At present last year's winning club, St. Nicholas, is leading the race here. The first game of the series will be played at Philadelphia on Saturday, Sept. 10. Then the Quakers will play both New York and Washington on the same afternoon. New York will entertain on Saturday, Sept. 17, and will use Bronx Oval as the scene of hostilities.

Nebraska Indians at Ridgewood.

There promises to be many exciting baseball situations at Meyerrose Park, Ridgewood, L. I., in a big double-header carded for to-morrow afternoon. The first game will bring together the Hobokens and Ridgewoods, while the Nebraska Indians will oppose the winner in the second contest. The Indians are coming all the way from Lincoln, Neb., to play this game. Big Chief Myers of the Giants at one time played with the Nebraska team. In the last game between the Hobokens and Ridgewoods thirteen innings were played, and the meeting to-morrow will, it is expected, be equally as well contested.

OVERBY'S STAY WAS SHORT.

Morris Harris Beat Big Black Fighter in Less Than Two Rounds.

Wilkesbarre, Penn., had a black champion until last night when he was put away for keeps at the National Sporting Club in less than two rounds.

Great things had been expected of Tom Overby, a strapping colored fighter from Wilkesbarre, and his backers were only too anxious to try him out. Tom O'Rourke matched him for ten rounds with Morris Harris as the star bout of last night's show. Harris is not nearly as big as Overby, who is about 6 feet 1 inch in height and weighs about 200 pounds well distributed.

The start of the go promised well. Harris being the more experienced fighter and an expert boxer started to sail into Overby right from the first tap of the gong, but Overby knew a little and Harris soon took it into his head to use a bit of caution. He managed to put several straight lefts on Overby's stomach, alternating with the same fist on the jaw. Overby couldn't gauge properly, but he didn't back away, thus giving Harris a better opportunity for his boxing work, but kept close to Harris and clinched when the going got too warm. He got in some short-arm blows on the body this way, and he was getting the attention of the crowd when the round ended.

Overby went right after Harris in the second round and forced the Philadelphian back. Harris countered well, but the Wilkesbarre black came again. He caught a left swing on the side of the head which so angered him that he went into his black opponent on the run. He banged Harris around with both hands, and there was a minute and a half of as lively scrapping as has been seen around here for a long while. The crowd was with Overby and shouted encouragement to him, and he responded gallantly. Harris was tiring, but the old generalship came to the fore. He waited for his opportunity and let his left go its full length. It caught Mr. Overby on the chin, and down he went. He knew enough, however, to take his time getting up. Then he went after Harris again. Harris stood the banging for about twenty-five seconds, then saw another opening, and let drive. Down went Overby again. He got up wabbly, and Harris dropped him with a right swing back of the ear just a few seconds before it was time for the bell to end the round.

Joe Phillips had the better of Jack Martin in the sixth round semi-final. Martin, who is rather new to the game, worked a straight left in the face rather effectively, but in the second round Phillips caught his young opponent with a right swing which almost stopped the bout. Martin earned the plaudits of the crowd by the way he came back in the last two rounds.

Winner May Tackle Coulon.

Johnny Coulon has been asked to come East next month and box the winner of the Joe Coster-Young Wagner bout, which will be decided at the Fairmont Athletic Club next Tuesday night. Coster has shown so much improvement of late that he has to be reckoned with in the running for the bantamweight title, and Wagner, by his victory over Frankie Burns, is conceded to be a serious proposition for Coulon's title, as Burns contends that he worsted the Chicagoan. The bout between Coster and Wagner on Tuesday night will be at the legitimate weight, both boys having agreed to weigh in at 116 pounds, ringside.

HARVARD'S EARLY FOOTBALL.

Thirty-five Players to Go to Frazier's Island for Two Weeks' Practice.

BOSTON, Aug. 26.—To make final arrangements for entertaining the Harvard football players, who will be his guests during the first two weeks of preliminary practice at Frazier's Island, Me., Dr. S. M. Blodgett, 1884, was in this city to-day. He stated that about thirty-five men will leave Boston on Sept. 1 for Stonington, the nearest large town to his camp. They will be followed on the next day by seven or eight coaches, and on Sept. 3 by two or three others. The practice on the island will last two weeks.

The first hardening of the principal candidates for the team is not in any way under the auspices of the Harvard Athletic Committee, which does not assume responsibility until Sept. 19. It is in continuation of the custom of previous years when the captain of the team usually entertained some of the veterans and most promising players at his Summer home.

This year it happened that Capt. Withington is a resident of Honolulu and that it would obviously be inconvenient for the players to go that distance for their first practice and that Dr. Blodgett, two of whose sons were members of the first and second squads last Fall and are candidates for positions this year, was able to offer the use of the camp on Frazier's Island.

Incidentally, and without any arrangement on the part of the Athletic Committee, Dr. Blodgett has been asked by Coach Haughton to make a little study of the best methods from the physician's standpoint of beginning the physical training. Every year when the men begin practice a number of them are laid up for several days with intestinal troubles. The idea is this year to start off with a diet somewhat similar to that administered to victims of kidney trouble and see if better results will not be reached.

It is expected that the work at Frazier's Island will consist of light football practice for about two hours in the morning, with baseball, tennis, swimming and other sports in the afternoon. Most of the coaches will return the day after Labor Day.

Want Tennis "Prelims" Played Here.

LONDON, Aug. 26.—The Lawn Tennis Association to-day cabled to Dr. James Dwight, President of the United States National Lawn Tennis Association, and to President Hoskins of the Australian Tennis Association, asking if it would be agreeable to both associations to have the preliminary matches between the English and American challenging teams for the Dwight F. Davis Cup played off in America this year. It had earlier been proposed to play off the preliminaries in Australia, but the Australian Association declined to guarantee the money necessary for the expenses of the two teams on the ground that the proposed British team is not sufficiently strong. The final matches for the cup, of which the Australians are the defenders for the third successive year, will be played in December.

New Cricket Record for England.

The county cricket eleven of Lancashire, England, has performed wonderful feats at the wickets this season. On June 18, in a game with Notts at Old Trafford, Lancashire made a new record in county matches by scoring 403 runs for eight wickets, and winning. This performance, brilliant as it was, Lancashire surpassed in a game with Hampshire on Aug. 13. Left with 403 runs to make in the second innings, the Lancashire men secured 404 runs in less than four hours and a half, and defeated Hampshire by five wickets.

ALEC SMITH RETAINS THE OPEN GOLF TITLE

Metropolitan Champion Completes Two Days' Competition at Deal in 301 Strokes.

After being hard pressed all the way, Alec Smith of Wykagyl successfully defended his title as metropolitan champion over the links of the Deal Golf and Country Club yesterday. He won with a score of 301 for 72 holes. This was two strokes better than the score of J. J. McDermott from Merchantville, who got the place.

Most of the other favorites finished in the money, the order of the first eight being as follows: Alec Smith, $150 and a gold medal; J. J. McDermott, $100; H. H. Barker, $75; Gilbert Nicholls, $50; Isaac Mackie, $40; Fred McLeod and James Thomson, $25 each, and George Sargent, $10.

When play began on the second half of the competition in the morning Barker enjoyed a three-stroke lead over his closest rivals with a score of 150, Smith, McDermott, Sargent, and Mackie all being bracketed at 153. Barker then proceeded to throw away his advantage by taking an 80 for his third round, whereas Smith and McDermott got 73 and 75, respectively.

With only eighteen holes left to play, it was apparent to all that, barring accidents, the struggle for the title rested between Smith and McDermott, whose totals for fifty-four holes were 226 and 228, respectively. Barker was then third with 230, while Gil Nicholls and Thomson each had 233, a stroke better than Mackie.

There was a marked similarity in the games of the two leaders in the afternoon. McDermott rarely made a mistake with either wood or iron, but luck was not with him on the greens. Time and again after a fine approach the Philadelphia champion failed to bring off the put. Several of these that refused to go down averaged in length from four to twelve feet.

His only poor holes were the fourth and ninth, where ragged putting resulted in sixes. After taking 40 to go out, McDermott started the homeward journey auspiciously by getting down his best put of the round, a twelve-footer for a three.

At the eleventh hole he tapped the cup for a four. The boy also had his nerve with him at the difficult twelfth hole, where he took a chance for the green on his second. The ball carried the ditch and a four resulted. Another short put that failed to sink prevented McDermott from getting a two at the Marl Pit, and the same happened at the fourteenth, when his five-foot put for a four went in the hole and out again. McDermott played faultlessly from there home, finishing with threes at the seventeenth and home holes.

Smith got his 75 in the afternoon mainly through steady play, althought the National champion also had occasional lapses in putting. These were at the fourth and ninth holes. Even so he went out in 39. When Smith did fall short or overapproach a green he generally managed to chip the next close enough to the pin to get down the put.

Matters looked bad for him at the eleventh hole, where after pulling his drive to the rough Smith got trapped on the approach. He got out well with the niblick, however, so that the mistake only cost him a shot, a five being recorded. From there on Smith was steady, finishing in par figures. His card for the day was:

Out	3	5	5	3	5	5	5	2	5—38
In	4	4	5	3	3	4	4	4	4—35—73
Out	4	4	4	6	4	3	5	3	6—39
In	4	5	4	3	5	4	4	3	4—36—75—148

McDermott's two rounds were carded as follows:

Out	3	5	5	5	4	3	5	4	6—40
In	3	5	4	4	5	4	4	2	4—35—75
Out	4	5	4	6	4	3	5	3	6—40
In	3	5	4	3	5	4	5	3	3—35—75—150

The scores were:

SKIPPER'S LAST CRUISE.

F. B. Hendrick a Veteran Known in Every Inland Waterway.

On her last trip along the Erie Canal a battered old barge has reached Utica. For years the old barge has been furrowing the inland waters of the continent, distributing in cities hundreds of miles from the ocean wonderful pink and white sea shells such as the inland dweller has never seen.

Her Captain, F. B. Hendrick, is a civil war veteran, with three scars won in fight with the Connecticut Volunteers, but for years he has lived the life of a water gypsy. His craft is driven by a 3½ horse power gasoline engine, and, helped when the wind sets right by a rag of a square sail, he has worked his way steadily along for thousands of miles.

It is his last trip now, he declares, and when once more he reaches the warm waters of the Gulf of Mexico, the Crescent will be sold for what she will bring and he will seek the Soldiers' Home at Dayton, Ohio, to end his days in comfort, for it is a bit cramped on the barge for a man of 65. In his little cabin, 6 by 12 feet, there is not room for much more than a small cooking stove and the shelves on which are ranged the shells of the sea, and as the damp weather comes a cough racks the old veteran, and a few rugs seem a poor bed for a man touched with rheumatism.

But it is a long trip yet that Capt. Hendrick plans to make before he lays up for the last time. He is going to work along to Rochester, and there ship his old craft by rail to Pittsburg. There he will launch her again in the Ohio River, and down this stream he will drift till he finds himself in the Mississippi. Down the Father of Waters he will go till he emerges in the gulf.

It is here that for years he has found the shells. Some of them he values as high as $12, for they are perfect specimens of rare species. Others he will let go for 10 cents, and some are so small that they are only fit to stick in patterns on boxes. But all alike are wonderful to those who have never seen the ocean, and they find their way into farmhouses for parlor ornaments, or give endless pleasure to children, as they press them against their ears to "hear the waves."

But of late the Captain has felt lonely, and only last week he dropped into a newspaper office at Utica to ask for the insertion of an advertisement for a wife. He could offer her, he said, a berth on the barge, even if it be cluttered up with oil cans and spare ropes and stands badly in need of a coat of paint, and he could take her for the most wonderful cruise, sometimes along canals or rivers, sometimes skirting the shores of the great lakes, and again braving the waves of the open sea. But the newspaper declared that it never went in for supplying matrimonial wants, and the old man began to speak dolefully about the necessity of going to a hospital.

"You see," he explained, "I'm getting a bit rheumatic, all on account of those wounds I got in the war, and it's lonesome always going about alone. It's nigh on twenty years since my wife died, in '81, and I've just been knocking about ever since. But I've got a bit of money put by, I don't drink, and I don't smoke, and if I could find a good woman willing to take me just as I am I'd use her right. It's my old wounds that trouble me most.

"How did I get them? Well, I've got three scars which tell the tale pretty well. One was a bullet in the hip; then I've got a five-inch gash on the shoulder blade and the third's a bayonet stab in the thigh—just one for each of the three regiments I served in.

"I know where the fellow who got his bayonet in my thigh is buried, all right. I drove my own bayonet clean through him. He made a shot at my heart, but I knocked his bayonet down with my rifle and his point just ripped open my thigh. As it struck me I let him have his, right through his heart. I don't like to think about it much nowadays, but I was a bloodthirsty youngster in those days, and I reckon I was as proud of that fight at the time as a Sioux Indian we read about was over a paleface scalp."

It's a long time, however, since the end of the war, and in spite of his white mustache the old shell collector has not much of the soldier about him now. But he and his weather-beaten craft, with the little bowsprit and its flag grown white in the sunlight, form one of the picturesque features of the Erie Canal.

GATES OIL NOTES SOLD.

Bankers Take $3,000,000 and Resell Them at Par and Interest.

The Texas Company, which operates the Southwestern oil properties owned by John W. Gates and his associates, has sold to a syndicate of banking houses $3,000,000 serial ten-year notes, secured by a first mortgage and bearing 6 per cent. interest. The purchasers are Goldman, Sachs & Co., Lehman Brothers, and Heidelbach, Ickelheimer & Co., who have resold the entire $3,000,000 at par and interest.

The stock of the company was increased last week from $18,000,000 to $36,000,000 and a stock dividend of 50 per cent. was paid to stockholders out of accumulated surplus. At the same time $2,000,000 of new stock was sold. The proceeds of the note issue are to be used to build extensions of the pipe line system.

The Northern Sells Manitoba Fours.

The Great Northern Railway has sold to Clark, Dodge & Co., White, Weld & Co., and Blodget & Co., $2,916,000 "Manitoba 4s." The bonds are consolidated mortgage 4 per cent. bonds of the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba Railway Company, dated May 1, 1883, and maturing July 1, 1933. The issue closes the mortgage behind an authorized $50,000,000, and is made to retire an equal amount of prior lien bonds, including $2,881,000 Dakota extension 6s maturing Nov. 1.

Atlantic Yacht Club's Regatta.

The annual regatta of the Atlantic Yacht Club will be held next week, beginning on Wednesday and extending over Labor Day, Sept. 5. On Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday the 65-footers Winsome, Aurora, and Istalena will race over the Sandy Hook course, where the international yacht races have always been sailed. The smaller boats will race over courses in Gravesend Bay, which have been carefully marked off. A navigation race is planned for Saturday, but many of the yachts will remain at Sea Gate on that day to take part in the annual regatta of the Bensonhurst Yacht Club. In the intercity race between New York and Boston for Class P boats, one of the most important features of the week, it has been decided that the New York boats will be Stuyvesant Wainwright's Cara Mia, Richard A. Monks's Windward, and Crescent, which is the property of Arthur G. Hill. The Boston boats will be Mavourneen, the property of George Lee; Timandra, which belongs to George B. Fallon, Jr., and H. S. Wheelock's Amoret. It is expected that there will be from 75 to 100 boats starting each day during the week.

Stein Beats Lawrence Easily.

Joe Stein, the east side lightweight, had an easy time defeating Charlie Lawrence of the Bronx in the ten-round final bout at the Lehigh Athletic Club last night. Stein went after his man aggressively in the first round and sent him to the floor with a right punch to the jaw. This jarring attack plainly took much of the fight out of Lawrence, and his efforts after that were centred in an attempt to stall out the limit. Time and again Stein made him back up under a shower of blows, but Lawrence managed to save himself. Stein made a fast finish, and in the tenth round Lawrence was hanging on, decisively whipped. There were seven preliminary bouts, and the final did not end till midnight.

Ramsdell Beaten Twice in Scotland.

Thirty thousand persons witnessed the athletic and cycling sports at Celtic Park, Glasgow, Scotland, on Aug. 13. E. W. Haley of the Herne Hill Harriers, England, carried off the honors of the meet by winning three first prizes. He defeated F. L. Ramsdell, the University of Pennsylvania sprinter, in two invitation handicaps, Haley, with 3½ yards start, taking the 120-yard dash in 0:12 1-5, and the 220-yard dash, with 3 yards start, in 0:22 2-5. In both races Ramsdell was on scratch. Haley also won the quarter-mile invitation handicap, with 7 yards start, from the champion, L. J. de B. Reed, in 0:50 2-5. In the half-mile invitation handicap R. Burton, the Scottish champion, finished third from scratch in 1:58 2-5, a new Scottish record for the distance.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

More Money Goes Out.

The banks yesterday met a further demand of $500,000 gold for Canada and of $150,000 for New Orleans through the New York Sub-Treasury. In addition there was a loss of $784,000 to the Sub-Treasury on the banks' transactions with the Government, and reports were current of further direct shipments by the banks to their correspondents in the interior. There was considerable variation in the indicated net loss in cash by the banks this week as reflected in the usual Friday estimates of the currency movements, but none showed as large a loss as might be expected in view of the variety of the demands which the banks have had to meet this week. It was recalled though that a week ago the estimates indicated a large gain in cash, whereas as a matter of fact the banks reported a net loss.

No Frost Damage.

All the crop advices from the Northwest were carefully scanned yesterday for some report of the frost damage which many had feared might have occurred overnight. Some pretty cold temperatures were reported, but they were nearly all from points above the corn belt, and in no part of this belt, according to the weather advices, was the temperature low enough to damage the crop. Predictions that warmer weather was at hand in the Northwestern States were received with satisfaction for the reason that they indicated that this visit of cold weather would pass without any harm to the corn crop, which is the only one of the major crops which usually has to face danger both from excessive heat and from frost.

⁂

New Stocks to be Listed.

If all the companies of which it is said that their securities are about to be listed make application to the Stock Exchange the Governing Committee will have a busy Fall. From mining issues the talk of listing has switched to industrials. The automobile industry is not represented by a single stock on the Exchange. Two concerns making automobiles and one tire company are now spoken of as anxious to have the market that listing their shares would afford. Then there is John W. Gates's Texas company.

⁂

Better Net Showings.

The Southern Railway Company's July earnings figures, made public yesterday, like those of the Atchison on the previous day, show a better control of expenses though a smaller increase in gross earnings. While operating revenues of $4,779,651 for the month represented an increase of only $419,154, the increase in operating expenses was still less, leaving net from operations at $1,385,555, a gain of $10,119.

THE COMMODITIES MARKETS.

Trading in the wheat market was constituted mostly of professional operations, with a good deal of business brought about by switching from one position into another. Private advices indicated that a large Albany speculator was liquidating his holdings in September, and buying December, while other dispatches were received stating that another Eastern milling concern was selling wheat on the September option which it had taken in during July. The opening was irregular, with some momentary steadiness displayed on the cables, but pressure immediately developed, due to liberal Northwestern receipts and in sympathy with the weakness in corn. After due reflection traders were also of the opinion that cables could not be construed as bullish, in view of the foreign news which reported continued drought in Northern Argentina and unsettled weather in the United Kingdom and France. Prices yielded from ½c to 1c a bushel, sagging until nearly midday, when a better tone developed. Mills were fair buyers at the decline, with further reports of a good flour business. There were also predictions to the effect that Winter wheat receipts would show a falling off, and the Modern Miller said that farmers are showing a disposition to hold their high-quality wheat for better prices. Prices recovered to about last night's finals, but near the close again eased off on estimate of large world's wheat exports, and in absence of any important cash or export demand. Cash wheat quoted: No. 2 red, Winter, $1.06¾, nominal, to arrive, cost, insurance, and freight; No. 2 red spot, nominal, new, $1.07¼, free on board, afloat, for export; No. 1 Northern, Spring, $1.22½, nominal; No. 2 hard, Winter, new, $1.08⅝, and No. 1 Northern, Manitoba, $1.15¼. Sales include 2,000 bushels No. 2 red, Winter, $1.06½, in elevator, domestic; outports, 56,000 bushels.

The corn market was decidedly weak during the entire session, with the best support coming from shorts and from buying by commission houses on resting orders. The opening was at a sharp decline, due to failure of frost to materialize, and on predictions of warmer weather for the ensuing twenty-four hours. There was active liquidation on the part of yesterday's buyers, with shorts also disposed to hammer values. Private advices were all generally favorable, and although there was light frost indicated in the western parts of Nebraska and some parts of the Northwest, it was generally thought that little damage had occurred. The slow cash demand also acted against values. Cash corn quoted: No. 2, 70¼c, nominal, elevator, to arrive, cost, insurance, and freight, domestic basis, and steamer, nominal, elevator, export basis.

The oats market was lower in sympathy with the weakness in corn, and in absence of demand. The technical position seemed to have been weakened as a result of the advance on Thursday, with the undertone unsettled throughout the day. Cash demand has slackened, and although receipts are lighter, they are still liberal. Cash oats quoted: Standard, 39c; No. 2 white, 39½c; No. 3 white, 39c; No. 4 white, 38½c; natural white, 39@40c; white clipped, 39½@43c.

Provisions were easier at the outset with corn, but on the decline there was some support rendered by packing interests. The close was steady, with little pressure in evidence.

COTTON.

The feature in the cotton market to-day was the unexpected deliveries of August. At the outset these tenders totaled over 19,000 bales, and as a result a decline in this option of over 25 points was witnessed. Other months sympathized with this weakness, but only temporarily so, as ring traders quickly observed that little cotton was offering. Shorts were disposed to cover on the failure of rain to materialize in Texas, and there was also some support given to values by brokers thought to be acting for bull account. The undertone continued steady throughout the day, and although in the late session weather advices became more favorable, there being reports of rain in different points in Texas, little effect was noted in prices. Offerings were as light as in the early session when the absence of rains possibly restricted selling. Bulls were buying the September option, and this support came in for quite a little discussion. Some operators were of the opinion that faith in the situation was indicated by their action, whereas other traders claimed that it was an absolute necessity for them to keep this month up if they intended to sell spot cotton on a basis of even 1¼@1¾c below the August price. As soon as the August tenders had been digested, and these totaled nearly 25,000 bales, it was found that there was not enough to go around, and in the late trading scattered short covering resulted in a recovery of over 50 points from the low. This strength also imparted a steadier undertone to other months. Crop advices from sections outside of Texas are generally favorable. Southern spot markets unchanged, to ¼c decline.

New York spot cotton quiet, unchanged; middling uplands, 16.40; middling Gulf, 16.65.

COFFEE.

Coffee met a sharp decline early, prices opening 6 to 10 points lower and later showing a further loss of about 5 points under selling for foreign account. Offerings were well absorbed and late sentiment was bullish when leading roasters were active buyers of September. At the close prices were steady at 5 points decline to 5 points advance, with sales amounting to 91,750 bags. The European markets were easier, Havre closing at 1¼ franc decline, and Hamburg was ¼@½ lower. In Brazil the Rio market showed an advance of 75 reis; Santos was unchanged. Cables from Santos indicated more favorable weather. The visible supply of Brazilian coffee in and afloat for the United States is 3,079,744 bags, against 3,703, 432 bags last year and 3,349,675 bags two years ago.

BONDHOLDERS' PROTECTIVE COMMITTEE

TO THE HOLDERS OF THE 4½% GENERAL MORTGAGE BONDS OF THE

Chicago Consolidated Traction Company

The undersigned have consented to act as a Committee for the purpose of protecting the rights and interests of the holders of the above bonds. A limited group of bondholders, acting through a Committee, have already obtained judgment against the Chicago Railways Company. There is grave reason to apprehend that, unless immediate steps are taken to enforce the payment of the guarantee upon outstanding bonds, the claims of such bonds will be disregarded in the proposed reorganization of the property, and will be made the subject of unfair discrimination in any adjustment of new securities. It is therefore important that the holders of such bonds, of which there are still a considerable number outstanding, should act at once in co-operation for the protection of their rights.

For this purpose the undersigned have been constituted a Bondholders' Protective Committee, and have executed and lodged a Deposit Agreement with the Windsor Trust Company of New York as Depositary. Holders of the 4½% General Mortgage Bonds of the Chicago Consolidated Traction Company are invited to become parties to the agreement by depositing their bonds on or before September 10, 1910, with the Windsor Trust Company, No. 59 Cedar Street, New York City, in negotiable form, with coupons of and subsequent to June 1, 1908. Certificates of deposit will be issued for bonds deposited.

Bondholders are earnestly recommended to lose no time in depositing their bonds.

American Ice Company Takes Title to East Side Plot—Sales in Harlem—Tenements Figure in Investment Buying—Deals in Brooklyn and the Suburbs.

Business in the realty market was quiet yesterday, there being no large transactions recorded. For the first time in many months no plans were filed for new structures either in Manhattan or the Bronx. The only sale in the auction room consisted of three five-story tenements at 148 to 152 East Eighty-sixth Street, near Third Avenue, sold under foreclosure by the Equitable Life Assurance Society against Harry L. Toplitz. There were no bids for the separate parcels, and when offered together by Joseph P. Day they were taken by Hortense B. Fisher for $115,800.

SALOON KEEPER SHOT BY DISOWNED SON

Little Girl Also Wounded as She Begs Her Brother to Spare Their Father.

MOTHER OVERPOWERS BOY

With the Aid of Another Son—Lad Had Been Turned Out for Giving Away Drinks.

An oppressive silence hung over the little group in the dining room of Frank Allgeier, a saloon keeper of 114 Wyckoff Avenue, Williamsburg, where Allgeier, his wife, Celia, their sixteen-year-old son Joseph, and their daughter Margaret, 14 years old, were seated at the supper table in their home above the saloon. Most oppressive of all was the silence of little Margaret.

A week ago her father had turned her brother Frank, Jr., 18 years old, whose favorite companion she was, out of their home to shift for himself. The father and son had quarreled because the boy, in the capacity of bartender for his father, gave away drinks to all his roisterous friends whenever the elder Allgeier was not in. Frank went away, but on Thursday night he met his uncle, Joseph Allgeier, on the street near his home and announced that he would "get" his father and "do him up." This threat had been borne back to the boy's home.

Suddenly, while the supper was still being served, the rear door of the flat was pushed open, and a moment later the figure of the disowned son loomed in the doorway of the dining room. The little girl gave a cry of alarm, but the father, rising angrily, stepped toward his son and ordered him out of the house.

"I'm going," they heard the boy say, "but first I want to settle a little matter."

The little girl sprang from her chair with a cry of fear, but her father ordered her not to move, and he himself walked over to the intruder to put him out.

In a moment the boy had whipped out a revolver, and, leveling it at his father, fired two shots. One of the bullets struck Allgeier in the stomach and he sank with a cry to the floor.

The little girl rushed to the side of the fallen man, and spreading her arms protectingly over him, begged her brother not to shoot again.

"Quick, quick, Frankie, go away!" she pleaded. "Please hurry away!"

But the revolver in the boy's hand was still leveled at the father, and before he could turn it aside, he had fired again. This time he missed the father, but a cry of pain came from the girl and she sank in a heap over her father's body.

Frantic at the thought that he had shot his sister, the boy flourished his revolver at random around the room, and emptied it of the two remaining shots, which lodged in the walls. Then he turned to escape.

His mother and younger brother, however, who till then had been spellbound in their chairs by the rapid happenings they had witnessed, recovered their senses and the use of their limbs by this time and rushed after him. They overtook him and overpowered him just as neighbors, attracted by the sound of the shots came piling into the flat.

A moment later Policemen Hart and Haubenreich of the Hamburg Avenue Station reached the place and arrested young Allgeier. Then they called an ambulance from the German Hospital. Dr. Menger, who came in it, found the elder Allgeier unconscious and said he would probably die. The girl had been shot in the right foot, and the bullet lodged in the bone in such a way that it could not be extracted. She was taken to the hospital with her father, and there it was found necessary to amputate the foot.

To Lieut. Rochester in the Hamburg Avenue Station young Allgeier, according to the police, admitted that he had done the shooting:

"He was always nagging at me," he said, "and I grew sick and tired of it. I'm the oldest child in the family, and I couldn't stand always being called down before the younger ones. I'm only sorry that I shot my little pet."

KOREAN SOVEREIGNTY ENDED

Announced That Emperor of Japan Will Become Absolute Ruler Monday.

SEOUL, Aug. 27.—Korean sovereignty, it is announced, has ceased and Mutsuhito, Emperor of Japan, will become absolute ruler of Korea next Monday, when the agreement between Emperor Yi Syek of Korea and Mutsuhito, which was signed Aug. 22, will be officially promulgated.

This annexation of the population and territory of the "Hermit Kingdom" has long been regarded as inevitable, even by the late Prince Ito, Japanese resident general in Korea, who, before he was assassinated by a fanatical Korean at Harbin, Manchuria, last Summer, realized the impracticability of the maintenance of a pretense of Korean independence and self-government. It is stated positively that Emperor Yi Syek and the former Emperor, Yi Heui, who abdicated in 1907, willingly consented to Japan's proposals for annexation, the terms of which were extremely generous.

HOW WOODRUFF GOT KAMP KILL KARE

Paid $12,000 for 1,000 Acres, Including Lake Kora, in Midst of the Tract the State Bought.

THE STATE WANTED THE LAKE

But Later Compromised and Bought 25,000 Acres for $167,000 with the Racquette Lake Shore Line.

ALBANY, Aug. 26.—The story of Timothy L. Woodruff's purchase of his camp in the Adirondacks thirteen years ago was retold to-day at the investigation into forestry affairs which is being conducted by Commissioners Clark and Austin at Gov. Hughes's direction. The Commissioners had not intended to question any of the witnesses publicly concerning the transaction, as they were in possession of the facts, until Frank D. Bell, one of the special counsel to the Forest, Fish, and Game Commission, who was on the stand to-day, volunteered some information on the subject. This led to further questioning and the reading of extracts from certain documents relative to the purchases.

Early in 1897, when Mr. Woodruff, then Lieutenant Governor, was a member of the Land Purchasing Board, the Forest Park and Land Company, of which W. W. Durant was President, offered for sale to the State a tract of about 25,000 acres of forest land in the region of Racquette Lake for $127,000. In the Fall of the same year the State bought the property for $167,000. Soon after this Mr. Woodruff purchased from the same company 1,000 acres, including Lake Kora, in the midst of the State's tract, and now known as Kamp Kill Kare, for $12,000. Shed Lake, now Sagamore, with its costly camp, was sold to Alfred G. Vanderbilt for $162,500. The Forestry Board reported that the lowest price at which the lands, with these two lakes, could be purchased, including the improvements on Shed Lake, was more than the board felt justified in paying, since the State's policy was one of forest preservation rather than the acquisition of scenery and water improvements.

Mr. Bell said to-day he had heard it stated, at the time the offer was made to the State by the Forest Park and Land Company, that Mr. Durant proposed to hold out Lake Kora. Mr. Woodruff told the witness that the Forestry Board had refused to buy the land because of this reservation. Later, when Mr. Durant became pressed for funds and wanted to sell, it was agreed that if the land company would convey to the State the shore line of Racquette Lake with the tract they might hold out Lake Kora.

It was learned to-night that Mr. Woodruff had forwarded a letter to the Commissioners telling how he came to purchase the camp. Mr. Clark said the letter had not been received.

Mr. Bell related in detail how he came to be interested with John N. Golding of New York, in lands at Racquette Lake, which were sold to the State last year for $35,000. Soon after this sale Mr. Bell was employed by the State as special counsel to the Forest, Fish and Game Commission at a salary of $7,500 and expenses. The department has since been criticised for this, but Bell declared that he considered the transaction was worth at least a million dollars to the State.

"If there was anything wrong about it," he told the Commissioners, "I will be glad to take the deed back, and pay the State $50,000. If the State believes it has been defrauded there must be some power to bring an action to set the transaction aside and cancel all of these deeds."

Bell said that in 1901 he had been requested by Mr. Woodruff to make an examination of the title of the land in question for the Forest Preserve Board. He did so, and reported that the heirs of Abner Benedict in New Jersey had title to some of the property. Bell secured an option on it for the State, but ex-Senator Allds and George N. Ostrander advised the board not to buy it.

At a meeting of the board at the Antlers Hotel in the Summer of that year the board refused to purchase the property. Mr. Woodruff at that time announced that the board proposed to evict all squatters on State land, and an action was brought later to eject Golding from his camp on Racquette Lake.

Bell agreed to defend Golding if the latter would buy the Benedict lands. Golding did so and in settling the ejectment action the property was eventually conveyed to the State for $35,000, Bell and Golding reserving the Golding camp, the Racquette Railroad terminal, which later was sold to Patrick Moynihan, and the camp now occupied by Frank H. Platt, son of ex-Senator Thomas C. Platt.

"Was Congressman George N. Malby interested in the agreement between yourself and Golding?" asked Commissioner Clark.

"Yes," replied Bell; "he was to have had a portion of the Golding interest for acting as counsel, but withdrew."

"Did Malby act as counsel for the Saranac Land and Timber Company in an action against the State Controller when he was a State Senator?"

"I heard so."

Bell said that neither Malby nor Platt had anything to do with the settlement of the Golding-Bell matter.

Speaker James W. Wadsworth, Jr., who is a member of the Forest Purchasing Board, wired the Commissioners to-day asking to be permitted to make a statement. He will be heard on Monday, when the investigation is resumed. Commissioner Whipple probably will be the last witness examined.

The name of Daniel F. Strobel of Herkimer, a member of the Republican State Committee, was brought out earlier in the day. John K. Ward, chief counsel to the department, who was on the stand, was asked if Mr. Strobel wasn't a steady trespasser on State lands. He replied that the Herkimer Lumber Company, of which Strobel was a member, had made quite a trespass in an instance where the location of a line and the contractor's deed were involved. The company won out in an action which was tried two years ago. Congressman Millington was a member of the firm.

Further than that, Ward said, Strobel had never been a trespasser except in a small way, in "bushing out old roads." The witness said he was not on friendly terms with Strobel. During the trial of the Saphert and Herrig and Gallagher timber stealing cases in Herkimer, Ward said Strobel had tried to influence public opinion in favor of the defendants, who eventually were acquitted.

"Referring to the famous Stuyvesant Fish dinner in New York in 1907, at which quail were served out of season," asked Mr. Austin, "did you ever try to find out who shot the quail?"

"I did not," answered Ward. The witness admitted that the sale of the quail constituted a violation of the game law, but he didn't ask Mr. Fish from whom the birds were purchased.

ANOTHER HAD HIS TROUSERS.

"Fashion Plate" Bailey Wanted the Wearer to Remove Them Forthwith.

Judge Bailey, colored, known in the neighborhood of his home as the "Fashion Plate," missed the trousers of his very finest black suit after moving from 134th Street and Fifth Avenue to his new quarters, 37 West 132d Street, Wednesday. Since then, the "Fashion Plate" has been doing detective work near his home, wearing his widowed black coat, with a keen eye for his stolen trousers.

At 134th Street and Fifth Avenue, he thought last night he spied his man. Stealing up behind and matching his coat with the trousers the other man wore he was quite sure he had, and the "Fashion Plate" loudly announced his conviction, vowing as loudly that he would have back his treasured trousers then and there.

When Policeman Lafferty reached the scuffling pair he thrust off the "Fashion Plate," who had almost accomplished his vow, and arrested the other, who said he was David Johnson of 119 West 134th Street, on a charge of petit larceny.

Johnson had been one of the movers with the van that had removed Bailey's belongings from his old home to the new.

CLOAK STRIKE AGREEMENT.

Leaders Sign It, but Men May Repudiate Their Action.

The Strike Committee of the cloakmakers and, it is believed, the Executive Committee of the Manufacturers Association, indorsed yesterday an agreement reached by their respective lawyers, and the strike is expected to be declared off on Monday if the strikers will accept the terms. While the manufacturers have made some concessions, the agreement waives the demand for the closed shop.

Meetings were held in a large number of halls on the east side to ratify the agreement yesterday afternoon, but when in reading the agreement the speakers came to the clause where the closed shop demand is waived the meetings broke into wild disorder.

The Strike Committee of the cloakmakers adopted the agreement unanimously, and it also was adopted unanimously at a meeting of the cutters at Webster Hall. Chairman Alexander Bloch of the Settlement Committee said the agreement was a great victory for the strikers, and that though the Strike Committee had full power the meetings of the strikers were called to ratify it merely as a matter of form.

"The strike is likely to be called off within twenty-four hours," he said.

Nevertheless the agreement was rejected at all the halls except by the cutters. Manhattan Lyceum was packed when Treasurer John B. Lennon of the Federation of Labor and Delegate Mitchell appeared and read the agreement. When the part was reached where the closed shop was waived pandemonium started. Shouts and execrations filled the hall, and a rush was made for the platform. Those on it were thrown into the auditorium, where they were pummeled until they fled precipitately to the street.

A meeting at Beethoven Hall in Fifth Street also broke up in disorder. The police had to disperse the crowds. There also were stormy scenes at many other halls.

The Executive Committee of the Manufacturers met at the Hoffman House to pass on the agreement. All they would say after the meeting was, "We are losing nothing." In many respects the agreement resembles the one drawn in July by Lawyer Louis D. Brandeis and a committee which the strike committee rejected.

POLICE RAID IN NEW STREET.

Detectives Were Inside the Gambling Room When Their Assistants Arrived.

A dozen plain-clothes policemen raided a second-floor room in one of the old buildings in New Street, south of Exchange Place, yesterday afternoon. It was after the close of the market, but a patrol wagon, an unaccustomed sight in the financial district since the passing of the bucket-shop industry several years ago, brought a crowd which blocked the street.

The raid was made on warrants issued by Magistrate Cornell in the Tombs Court. Complaints had been made to Inspector Russell by two men. One, whose name appears on the complaint at A. P. Murray of Eighth Street, Bayonne, said he had lost $840 at craps there last July. The second complainant was named as John P. Fitzmaurice of 971 Broadway, Bayonne.

The patrons of the room were chiefly office boys and clerks of the Wall Street district. When the police appeared the lookout passed the word, and there was a rush of the fifty men and boys in the place for the narrow hallway.

Detectives Dunnelly and Dungate were inside, and had marked the men they regarded as the proprietors and employes, five in all, and no attempt was made to arrest anybody else.

The five prisoners were taken to Police Headquarters. The alleged proprietor gave his name as Joseph Burke, a clerk of 48 Rector Street. The other prisoners were Louis Dowd, 7 Summer Street, Brooklyn; Joseph Murphy, 10 Washington Street; John Dunley, 81 Second Street, Brooklyn, and Michael Shaw, 520 Washington Street. All were locked up on charges of violating Section 970 of the Penal Code, which relates to gambling.

SARANAC WATER CARNIVAL.

Daniels's Boat Is Barely Beaten—Guide's Launch Distances Others.

Special to The New York Times.

WAWBEEK, N. Y., Aug. 26.—By the narrow margin of six seconds C. M. Daniels, the champion swimmer, failed to win the principal power boat race at the annual carnival on the Upper Saranac Lake this afternoon. In the Ketchup, built on the lines of the noted Arab III., Mr. Daniels covered a fourteen-mile course in 20:04, but the handicap of 11 minutes and 30 seconds given to the Perhaps, owned by J. S. Bache of New York, proved too great for Mr. Daniels's boat to overcome.

The Blue Bird, the fast boat of John G. Agar of New York, which came in first in another of the power boat races, was disqualified because it bettered the trial time upon which handicaps were based by more than five points. The race was awarded to the Kork, owned by F. H. Chatfield of Pittsburg, the Texas, owned by Douglas Dunn of New York, getting second place.

A notable feature of the day was the winning of the first race for one-cylinder motor boats by Charlie Wood, a guide in a motor boat constructed by himself on the lake. It distanced ten boats turned out by leading manufacturers.

Horace Holt, a son of Dr. L. Emmett Holt of New York, and Miss Baker, a New York girl visiting at the Holt camp, were winners of the double rowing race.

Dr. L. Emmett Holt was Chairman and J. Benhard Secretary of the campers' committee in charge of the carnival. H. G. Kriebs of Philadelphia was Chairman and Mr. Daniels Secretary of the committee of arrangements. Fully 500 persons witnessed the races and illuminated launch parade with which the carnival was brought to a close to-night.

DRUG CLERK SURRENDERS.

Cantor, Whose Mistake in Prescription Caused Child's Death, Is Held.

Ira B. Cantor, 32 years old, the drug clerk who is alleged to have caused the death of one-year-old Denis Shea of 231 East Ninety-sixth Street on Wednesday by filling a prescription that called for laxol with lysol, which is poison, surrendered himself at the Harlem Branch of the Detective Bureau yesterday.

Cantor is clerk in the drug store of Herman Berger at 1,863 Second Avenue. The child died after a dose of lysol had been given to him. The police looked for Cantor, but were unable to find him.

Cantor was later arraigned before Coroner Hellenstein and held in $5,000 bail to await the inquest. He made no statement to the Coroner.

FIRE HORSES GO UNSHOD.

Firemen Tired of Paying City's Bills, Which Waldo Holds Up.

Because Commissioner Waldo has refused to pay $3 for shoeing fire horses, his limit being $2.50 each, the Queensborough fire horses are going unshod, for the volunteer fire fighters have rebelled against paying the blacksmith's bill themselves.

The Horseshoers' Union has set $3 as the price, and since they became deadlocked with the Commissioner, the firemen have been footing the bills themselves.

BOY GIVES CLUE TO LACKAWANNA THEFTS

Sweeper's Discovery of Commutation Tickets, Sold Out Series, Leads to Arrest of Two Agents

TRAINMEN IN THE PLOT

Embezzlements Made Easy by Negligence of Auditors to Compare Blanket Tickets with Duplicate Stubs.

James Hynes, a bright, seventeen-year-old boy employed to sweep the floors of the ticket office at the Lackawanna station in Hoboken, several days ago noticed that some of the short commutation tickets that were being sold there did not correspond in number to the series on sale for that day. He noticed the same thing on another day and decided to communicate the fact to Supt. John M. Rhine of the Eastern Division of the railroad. This started an investigation, in the course of which, according to the officials of the road, embezzlements involving several persons and extending possibly over a period of many years and amounting to thousands of dollars, were unearthed by the railroad detectives.

Yesterday morning Chief Detective Edward Beatty of the railroad arrested James J. Skelly of 3,656 Boulevard, Jersey City Heights, who has served twelve of his seventeen years in the company's employ as ticket agent at the Hoboken station, and Martin Anderson of Roseville Avenue, Newark, who has been employed by the company ten years, starting as a newsboy, and for five years served as ticket agent at the same terminal. Both were arrested on a warrant obtained from Recorder McGovern of Hoboken, charging them with embezzling $500 from the railroad since February, 1910.

Both men were taken before Supt. Rhine and closely questioned by him and Chief Beatty. Skelly refused to make any statement, but Anderson, according to Chief Beatty, made a confession to Supt. Rhine and Major Scofield, counsel for the railroad, implicating half a dozen others, trainmen, conductors, and clerks, whose names the officials of the road would not make public last night.

According to the detective, Anderson confessed that the alleged embezzlements had been carried out by Skelly and himself, chiefly in the large blanket tickets for considerable distances, by clipping from the duplicate stubs which they returned to the company's main office at Scranton a certain percentage of the mileage sold to the passenger. The passenger's ticket, taken up by the conductor, found its way in time to the Scranton office, and there should have been compared with the duplicate stub sent in by the ticket agent. According to Anderson, however, Skelly knew that the auditors employed to do this work of comparison for some reason failed to attend to it.

Anderson also confessed, according to the police, to the irregularity discovered by young Hynes in the matter of the commutation tickets sold out of their series. These, he said, were collected by brakemen and conductors on the commuters' trains, who secretly neglected to punch them, and later gave them to the two ticket agents for resale. He named one such brakeman, according to Chief Beatty, as John M. Horton, who was then in the station.

When Horton was led into the Superintendent's office and confronted with Anderson's statement, according to the officials of the road, he drew $22 from his pocket, and, throwing the money on the table, exclaimed disgustedly:

"Take it. That's all I ever made out of the business!"

He was arrested on a charge of embezzlement and locked up with the two others.

Just how much the alleged embezzlements will amount to the officials were unable last night to say. Despite the fact that the formal charge specifies only $500 stolen since last February, Chief Beatty said that the period of operation might be found to have extended over many years, while even after a few day's work yesterday, it was said, the force of six auditors going over the books of the two agents found a shortage of from $2,500 to $3,000. Chief Beatty said the embezzlements during the period from February to August of this year involved from $400 to $500 each month.

Other arrests, it was said, may be made in a few days on the basis of Anderson's confession. Supt. Rhine declared that nine men are employed to audit all the returned tickets and agents' stubs in the Scranton office, and said it was remarkable that in spite of these precautions the simple comparison of the tickets and duplicate stubs had been omitted. The confidence with which Anderson and his comrade seemed to bank upon such negligence, the officials say, seems to indicate that they were not without confederates in the main office.

BEFRIENDS THE MOSQUITOS.

Bronx President Blocks Appropriation to War on the Staten Island Army.

Acting Mayor Mitchel for the first time yesterday occupied the Mayor's chair at a meeting of the Board of Estimate. Several important questions came up for discussion, including keeping up the work of killing mosquitos on Staten Island and how to keep Brooklyn streets clean. The mosquitos found a friend in Borough President Miller of the Bronx, and for a time, at least, they will be allowed to continue unmolested in Richmond Borough.

Health Commissioner Lederle requested that $4,500 be transferred from another unexpended account, so that the work of mosquito extermination might be carried on. The oiling of pools and keeping ditches clean, he said, must be continued, in order to prevent the breeding of the 1911 crop. Health Commissioner Trybus of Richmond, sitting in the board in place of Borough President Cromwell, testified to the great value of the mosquito extermination war. Acting Mayor Mitchel favored the plan, but when a vote was taken Borough President Miller voted against the suspension of the rules. The vote killed the transfer, although later it was suggested that the questiton be brought up at the next meeting.

Chief Magistrate McAdoo requested an appropriation of $28,428 to provide for salaries incident to the establishment of new Magistrates' courts. Chief Magistrate Otto Kempner of Brooklyn made a request for $21,000 for the courts of the Second Department.

IN NEW JERSEY.

In Newark Frank Tackach, who says he has no home, confessed yesterday he had committed many robberies in the past six years. He was arrested by a detective, whose attention was attracted to him by the bulging of his coat pockets. Among the articles found in his pockets were a pair of brass knuckles.

In Newark Peter Lawson, a confidential clerk, pleaded guilty yesterday before Judge Davis in Special Sessions to having embezzled $1,477.04 from the sewing machine company by which he was employed. He was remanded for sentence next Friday.

In a Newark fire G. D. Dragnetti of 149 Garside Street yesterday morning was forced to escape by sliding down a board from the second-story window. Dragnetti was alone in the house, and would have probably been burned to death if a neighbor had not awakened him.

In Montclair Miss Anna Bruen of Brooklyn was severely injured in a runaway yesterday, sustaining a scalp wound and a dislocated shoulder when she was hurled to the street. Miss Bruen, who was a guest of Miss Frances C. Harris of 7 Clinton Avenue, was being taken to the Lackawanna Station when the horse ran down the hill on Gleuridge Avenue.

Newton society learned yesterday of the separation of Dr. Harvey J. McCloughan of 75 Main Street, and his wife, who charges him with inhuman treatment. Dr. McCloughan said that on Wednesday morning his wife and her half-sisters locked him in his room, packed her goods, and shipped them to Newark. He said that his marital difficulties have been caused by a Newton man. Mrs. McCloughan was a teacher in the Newton Presbyterian Church Sunday school.

In Ocean Grove the forty-first annual camp meeting began yesterday with a consecration service led by Bishop Wilson. In the evening the Lord's Supper was administered. The regular schedule of sixteen meetings will begin to-morrow and continue until Sept. 5.

TEMPTATIONS OF THE STAGE.

Too Much Religion Was What One Young Actress Found.

"Speaking of the temptations of the stage," remarked a young woman just back from the road, "hear this experience of mine. There were seven in our company, and six are Christian Scientists. I was the only outsider, so they straightway began to work upon me. It was really funny. The star, who, being a matinée idol, ought theoretically to have had a large and highly colored past, was possibly the devoutest convert of all. He used to arise every single morning an hour before breakfast to read and study his lesson for the day. Fancy an actor on the road ever getting up before he had to.

"We stayed more than a month in Chicago, and several of us stopped at a small family hotel, where I was put at the same table with four of the dearest old ladies I ever met. Two were Roman Catholics and two were High Church Episcopalians, and when they saw the Christian Scientists at work on me that aroused their zeal.

"Morning, afternoon, and evening there was hardly a minute when some representative of these three sects wasn't doing missionary work. On Sundays I went to morning service with the little Catholic ladies, and to evening service with the two High Church Episcopalians. I received books on doctrine and Church history to read. None of my dear old ladies would go to the theatre to see our play, even though we all explained to them that it was of a most improving sort.

"Finally we left Chicago, and the Scientists in our company thought they would have a clear field. However, they had underestimated the enemy. Sure enough, the little old ladies followed me up all along the route. The little Episcopalians sent me a High Church sermon to read every week, and the Roman Catholics sent me devotional books and tracts. At the end of the season they sent me a rosary that had been blessed and told me to use it.

"That night the leading woman came into my room and saw the rosary hung on the mirror, and suddenly jumped to the conclusion that I was really intending to embrace Catholicism. She stared and gasped. 'Well, to think they got you after all, with six of us in Science here in the company.' They felt mightily chagrined.

"But there were the temptations of the stage. Six people within the company trying to lead me up to grace and four people outside adding sermons and solicitude. Ten people trying to bring me to the true fold and no one trying to lead me estray.

"The only pity of it is that after all I am still a Unitarian."

POSED AS A SURGEON.

"Dr. Alexander" Is Put Out of the Kings County Hospital.

The surgeons of the Kings County Hospital were sitting on the front piazza of the Stann house, where they live, about 10 o'clock yesterday morning, when a man approached and introduced himself as Dr. Alexander. He said he had served in the hospital several years before, and sitting down chatted for some time, mentioning the names of several doctors whom they knew to have worked at the hospital about six years ago. He was a man about 35 years of age, and about five feet eight inches in height. He had black hair, was clean shaven, and wore a black suit. Altogether he appeared to them as a prosperous doctor. They invited him to luncheon and treated him with great cordiality. In the afternoon, upon his asking whether he might not assist in an operation, they gladly consented.

When they arrived in the operating room they had their first suspicions awakened by his putting on wrong side in front the long gown which the surgeons wear when operating. He got by with this mistake, however, by explaining that he had just come from Paris, where the doctors were wearing the mthat way now. The next thing he did was to take up an instrument before sterilizing his hands, whereupon the doctors jumped upon him like a flash.

Quickly apologizing for this he proceeded to undertake the sterilization process, while the doctors all watched him closely. It was here that he failed completely, for instead of washing his hands with disinfectant soap and then taking care not to touch anything before going on with the operation, he gave his hands a hasty wash, picked up a bottle on a table and examined it nonchalantly. This was too much, and out went "Dr. Alexander."

Not satisfied with this rebuff, he returned in the evening and coolly made himself at home in the room of one of the doctors who was out. He was soon discovered by the bell boy and put out again. The doctors believe that this "Dr. Alexander" may be responsible for the disappearance of some of the collar buttons, scarfpins, and other articles which they have been losing lately.

GIRL ASKS TO BE SENT AWAY.

Tells Police She Is Homeless and Meditated Suicide—Her Wish Granted.

Tired of the glare of the white lights and the companions it brought her, Marguerite Sullivan, 17 years old, walked into the Clymer Street Police Station, Brooklyn, yesterday morning, and begged to be sent to some institution. The girl told Lieut. Lyman that she had meditated suicide.

While talking the girl staggered, and would have fallen but for the assistance of a policeman. It was then discovered she was weak from the lack of nourishment.

She said she came from Westfield, N. Y., where her mother died ten years ago. Two years later her father died. She then went to live with an aunt in Manhattan, and stayed with her until a year ago, when she suffered from appendicitis, and went to a hospital. While there her aunt died, and on being discharged she found herself homeless.

Charged with being a vagrant, she was taken to the Bedford Avenue Court. Magistrate Higginbotham committed her to the House of the Good Shepherd.

BURGLAR A WAGON DRIVER.

Caught by Detectives in Hiding, $3,500 in Loot Is Found.

James F. Kelley, a driver for a bakery, was caught by Detective Sergeants Frank Tuite and Joseph Herter in the act of stealing goods in the grocery store of Aaron Ward & Sons, 951 Broad Street, Newark. His arrest led to the recovery of more than $500 in goods taken from the grocery and about $3,000 of diamonds.

Edward T. Ward of the grocery firm, complained to Capt. William A. Carroll that goods were being constantly missed from the store. The detectives went there and concealed themselves. Kelley entered the store early yesterday morning and was carrying away his plunder when the detectives intervened.

The detectives went to his house, at 358 Hunterdon Street, and found a trunk full of stolen articles. Included among them, the police say, was a diamond brooch valued at $1,000, a lady's diamond ring, a bracelet set with diamonds, and a diamond horseshoe pin. Kelley is called a pugilist, and is said to have been known as "Cyclone Kelley," and at one time a trainer for Jim Jeffries. The owners of the jewelry are not yet known.

BROOKLYN IN CELEBRATION.

Expects to Share in Benefits Tunnels Will Bring Long Island.

That Brooklyn will co-operate with the rest of Long Island in celebrating the opening of the Pennsylvania tunnels on Sept. 8, was assured yesterday when Borough President Steers appointed a Committee of Arrangements.

The sentiment expressed by Brooklyn business men and officials shows that the borough expects to share in the benefits that the tunnels will bring to Long Island. They believe that Brooklyn's chief benefit will come from an increased population.

STALLO HEIRESSES ASK LARGER INCOME

Surrogate Refuses, and Wants to Know Why Father Can't Support Them.

TRY TO KEEP APPEAL SECRET

Denial of Motion Reveals That Children Who Will Inherit $15,000,000 from Grandfather Are in Need.

Surrogate Cohalan announced yesterday a decision, the wording of which indicated that Laura and Helen Stallo, 17 and 19 years old, heiresses to $15,000,000 left in trust for them early this year by their grandfather, Alexander McDonald, a Standard Oil magnate of Cincinnati, believe that they need more money than they are now receiving. The decision says that more details should be given of the inability of their father, Edmund K. Stallo, a lawyer of 165 Broadway, to provide for them out of his own means. The decision said:

> The petitions should contain a more detailed statement of the amount of the income of the infants and the inability of the father to provide for them out of his own means, and his consents should be obtained to the allowance. Petitions denied, with privilege to renew same when amended as indicated.

The papers in the case were carefully kept from the reporters by the Court Clerk, who refused also to give the names of the lawyers on the ground that "they didn't want the newspaper to know about the case."

Alexander McDonald died last March in Long Beach, Cal., at the age of 82. His estate, which was estimated to be worth $15,000,000, was left to his granddaughters, Laura McDonald Stallo and Helen McDonald Stallo. McDonald came to this country in 1851 and settled in Cincinnati. He was a partner of John D. Rockefeller in the oil business, and was President of the Standard Oil Company of Kentucky, a Vice President of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, the "Oil Trust"; a Director of the Big Four Railroad, of the Third National Bank, and of the Carnegie Trust Company.

McDonald's only daughter married Edmund K. Stallo, now of New York City, and upon her death her two daughters went to live with their grandfather. He retired from business five years before his death. His granddaughters were his only descendants. He often said he would leave everything he had to them, and hoped they would marry for love, without regard to the man's financial condition.

Upon the death of his first wife Stallo married, in 1904, the divorced wife of Dan R. Hanna, son of Mark Hanna. She was May Harrington, a daughter of one of the most influential and wealthy men in Cleveland, Ohio. She divorced Hanna in 1898 on the ground of cruelty. Stallo's father was John Stallo, Minister to Italy under President Cleveland.

After the death of their grandfather the Misses Stallo came to New York. For a while they lived at the Waldorf, and then they went to the Plaza. Edmund K. Stallo, their father, attracted some attention several years ago by promoting a company to run a railroad from Mobile, Ala., through Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee, and Arkansas and thence northward to Chicago. A receiver was appointed early this year for the company, known as the Alabama Securities Company, by Supreme Court Justice Giegerich, on application of Edward V. Harman, who held a judgment against it for $12,232.

It was rumored last year that Mr. and Mrs. Stallo would separate, but their differences, if they ever had any, were patched up. They live at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel.

WRECK'S VICTIMS NOW EIGHT.

Doubt About the Identity of One of the Women Killed.

DURAND, Mich., Aug. 26.—To add to the difficulty of identifying the charred bones of the victims of Wednesday night's Grand Trunk wreck near here, bones said to represent two additional bodies were found in the morgue to-night in a sack that had been overlooked in yesterday's excitement by Undertaker C. E. Mapes, who is in charge of the dead. This brings the number of dead to eight.

Repeated inquiries from relatives of passengers thought to have been on the ill-fated Pullman sleeper Nebraska led Dr. C. Fair, surgeon for the Grand Trunk, to remark to Undertaker Mapes that there must have been more bodies in the wreck than were recovered. This recalled to Mapes's mind a sack that some one unknown to him had brought to the morgue yesterday morning. In the confusion incident to assembling the other six bodies, Mapes said the sack was pushed into a corner and was forgotten until to-night. When the sack was brought out and its contents examined, Dr. Fair stated that the bones represented probably two additional dead.

Among the persons for whom inquiries are being made are Miss Belle Scott, a school teacher of Chicago, who was on her way to Toronto; the daughter of George Jagamann of West Fulton Street, Chicago, and Mrs. H. I. Jeffers of Washington, D. C., a purse bearing whose name was found to-day pinned to the clothing taken from one of the bodies. Some question arose to-day as to whether one of the six bodies found yesterday is that of Mrs. Jeffers or Mrs. Lewis Squire of Chicago.

SERVANT HELD AS FIREBUG.

Employer Says She Twice Tried to Burn His House in the Bronx.

Sixteen-year-old Mary O'Brien of 4,768 Third Avenue was arrested on a charge of arson by Detectives Buttermeyer and Quick last night on complaint of Thomas McQuaid, at whose home she was employed as a servant. McQuaid charged her with twice attempting to set fire to the two-story frame house at 2,321 Washington Avenue, where he lives with his wife, his invalid mother, and seven children.

McQuaid noticed an odor of smoke in the house on Thursday night and traced it to the cellar, where he found a bundle of hay ablaze. He put out the fire and said nothing about it.

Last night his invalid mother saw the girl dart from a bedroom on the second floor to one downstairs, and becoming suspicious, went up and found a mattress ablaze. She called her son, and they put out the blaze. McQuaid stopped the girl as she was leaving the house and telephoned for the detectives.

McQuaid said he took the girl from the Catholic Protectory, which she entered after the death of her father, five years ago. Ever since, he said, his wife had been missing small sums of money, some of which the girl confessed to having stolen. She denied all knowledge of the two fires.

NEW PACIFIC MAIL SERVICE.

New Zealand Subsidizes 22-Day Route from San Francisco.

WELLINGTON, N. Z., Aug. 26.—Premier Ward to-day informed the House that he had concluded arrangements with the Union Steamship Company of New Zealand for the establishment of a subsidized mail steamship service between New Zealand and San Francisco, by way of Rarotonga (Cook Islands) and Papeiti, (Society Islands.) The service, he said, would start from Auckland Oct. 22 and mails carried by the vessels would cross the Pacific in twenty-two days and reach London in thirty-two days.

The Government, Premier Ward added, desired to obtain the Vancouver service for which Canada had asked tenders, and if the Vancouver service was established the San Francisco contract, if it proved satisfactory, probably would be extended to include Wellington as the terminal port.

NARRAGANSETT DIVERSIONS.

Cottagers Amuse Themselves with Gymkhana Races Despite Overcast Skies.

Special to The New York Times.

NARRAGANSETT PIER, R. I., Aug. 26.—A polo pony show and gymkhana races proved an outdoor diversion for the cottage colony this afternoon, despite overcast skies and a rain-soaked field. The show took place on the grounds of the Point Judith Country Club. Among the various events were bending races for men and women and the Gretna Green race, in which the women led ponies to the men. Both then rode to a table placed in the field. The men dismounted and lit cigars, and, taking partners, rode back to the winning post, each couple holding a handkerchief.

According to the rules of the race, the first couple retaining the handkerchief and cigar alight is the winner. The event caused much amusement among the spectators, and loud plaudits greeted the winning couple, Devereux Millburn and Miss Florence Sears, as they dashed down the polo field.

The bending races for men and women also afforded much fun for the lookerson. Prizes were awarded for heavyweight and lightweight polo ponies. There was also a potato polo race for youngstars under 15 years of age.

Miss Eleanor Sears, who rode astride, won the race in the musical stall event, her dashing riding and fine horsemanship being much admired. Miss Emily Randolph, who also rode astride in this event, was a close rival of Miss Sears.

Among those present at the gymkhana events were Prof. Brander Matthews and Mrs. Matthews, Mr. and Mrs. Robert E. Strawbridge, Mrs. Joseph K. Thomas, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel H. H. Holmes.

The referee was F. A. Gill.

A pleasant social event was the birthday party given by Mrs. Alfred E. Norris of Philadelphia to-night at The Lodge, on Ocean Road. Supper was served at about 10 o'clock, followed by music and dancing. A musical programme was provided by the Casino Orchestra. Among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. Robert E. Strawbridge, Mr. and Mrs. Henry W. Harrison, Dr. and Mrs. Archibald Thompson, Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Wiley, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Rathbone, Mr. and Mrs. L. Harrison Dulles, Mr. and Mrs. Henry B. SUMMER SHADOW

By RICHARD LE GALLIENNE

LIFE is running fast away,
All the woods are yet to learn:
What did yonder squirrel say?
And I never shall return—

Not, like bud or building bird,
Come when April comes again;
Scarcely have I learned a word
Of the language of the rain.

Swift the summer glides away,
Not one lesson learned aright;
Soon comes round the longest day—
Ah! how soon the longest night!

TOPICS OF THE WEEK

Centenaries of Dickens and Thackeray

IF ONE needed a concrete instance of the unabated popular affection with which Dickens and Thackeray are regarded, such an instance can be found in the active interest which is being aroused in the approaching centenaries of those two leading novelists of the Victorian era. Thackeray was born July 18, 1811; Dickens, Feb. 7, 1812. In both cases the anniversary is still far to seek. And yet, the London papers every now and then give space to some suggestion as to the proper manner for celebrating these approaching centenaries. So far, nothing has actually been done, except, we are told, by the second-hand bookshops of London, in the windows of which there are already being displayed a goodly number and variety of Dickens and Thackeray editions. An elaborate centenary de luxe edition of Thackeray, to contain a series of 500 new plates designed by Harry Furniss, is announced by one publisher, while another, the original publisher of the great satirist's works, will bring out an edition in 26 volumes, entirely under the direction of Lady Ritchie, who is editing the biographical prefaces, in which some additions to the existing material will appear. This activity among the booksellers and publishers is, of course, natural and will undoubtedly increase. Of a great and favorite author there can be no more pleasing memorial than an adequate copy of his works. In the case, however, of Dickens, whose pen achieved so much in behalf of oppressed and fallen humanity, a memorial taking the form of some permanent beneficence—some charity that would seek to alleviate the sufferings which ever found a sympathetic and helpful portrayal in his art—would seem to be the most fitting tribute to his genius.

Ancient Rome and Modern America

WHEN Signor Ferrero, the Italian historian, visited this country recently, one felt that he might be feared more than most distinguished foreigners passing through America, as the veritable "chiel amang us takin' notes." Moreover, we all knew that, following the habit of the historian in such matters, "faith he'll prent it." Now that he is "printing it," one finds a refreshing novelty in the inevitable comparison that this student of classic times draws between the America of to-day and the Greece and Rome of antiquity. And the surprise of it is that Signor Ferrero finds the United States far more closely allied to certain vital features of the Grecian and Roman civilizations than the existing nations of Europe. Thus, in an article in the current Atlantic Monthly, Signor Ferrero finds that "the lavish giving of the rich is but a single aspect of a noticeable phenomenon in which America is nearer the ancient world than Europe is"; while another resemblance is to be found in our "minimizing of the bureaucratic side of public life." This likeness between the two civilizations brings Signor Ferrero to the interesting conclusion that ancient Athens and Rome can be far more easily understood here than elsewhere, for the simple reason that those two cities are reappearing on this side the Atlantic:

> A citizen of New York can more easily comprehend certain aspects of the life in ancient Rome or Athens than a citizen of London or of Paris can, particularly as regards the rapid recurrence of elections which involve many interests. * * * In America there happens what happened in the ancient world: elections are habitually important, and even the Chief Executive, whose acts involve such varied and important interests, is often changed.
>
> In many legal details, likewise, I have found ancient Rome reappearing in the United States: for example, in the power possessed by the Magistrates.

From all of which one gathers either that the United States is more "ancient" than we thought, or that Athens and Rome were more modern.

Mayor Gaynor as Author

WHAT will be considered a particularly timely article comes from the pen of Mayor Gaynor in the September Century Magazine. The recent attack on Mr. Gaynor's life naturally increased the popular interest in everything pertaining to him, and thus the inner view of some of the leading factors in his official career, which he himself gives in this article on "The Problem of Efficient City Government," is particularly welcome just now. Mayor Gaynor writes as he talks, with complete conviction and in a quiet strain that is calculated to allay any doubts as to his ability to cope with the problems which he has set out to solve. He does not belittle the weight of these problems, but he does stimulate his readers by his optimistic handling of them. Thus:

> An inevitable cause of corrupt local government is the control of the government or the conduct of officials by outside bosses or organizations. The long era of that condition is passing. When the writer of this article so stated in Tammany Hall during the last Mayoralty contest in the City of New York he received more ridicule than sober consideration for it. And yet we are on the eve of being completely emancipated from such condition. Only an ignorant or corrupt community could elect a Mayor who would be such a tool.

Evidently Mr. Gaynor holds strongly to the old-time democratic notion that the people are generally right. He is not inoculated with the cynicism that inevitably takes the worst view of things.

The World's "Best Seller"

"SIX MILLION six hundred and twenty thousand and twenty-four copies," is the report of the British and Foreign Bible Society's sale of Bibles for last year. Moreover, the same organization estimates that during the 106 years of its existence it has issued no less than 222,000,000 copies of the Scriptures—a record that undoubtedly stands unequalled in the history of book publishing. As showing where the Bible circulates, the British Society estimates that "if the Bible Society could gather together representatives of all the nations and peoples for whom it has provided the Word of God in their mother tongue, every continent would send its delegates—75 from Europe, 152 from Asia, 103 from Africa, 32 from the Americas, and 62 from Oceania—424 in all." And the sale of the Bible, according to this interesting report, is steadily growing. Thus, the sales last year were 685,000 in excess of the output in the previous year and constitutes a record in the history of the society. When one remembers that these figures represent the activities of only one Bible society and that a work of similarly immense proportions is carried on by organizations of the same kind in this country and elsewhere, the vitality of the Bible as a "best seller" becomes sufficiently apparent.

"Heathen" Versus Englishman

SIDE by side in the London Spectator appear a Chinese student's remark that to avoid misunderstanding it might be well for England to send better educated men and women to this country as missionaries, and a Mohammedan's innocent observation that, as the ex-Sultan of Turkey not only gave grounds for Christian churches and schools, he supposes that the London County Council will be willing to give the Islamic Society the land whereon to build a mosque. Unfortunately the County Council has no land to give, except by grace of the British ratepayer, but the irony of the "heathen" is delightful. The man who tries to "hustle the East" seems to be in a fair way to find the East on his own ground, "hustling" also.

MR. ROOSEVELT'S AFRICA

A Characteristic Account of a year Spent by the "American Hunter-Naturalist" in Pursuit of Big Game.

SPORT, PHILOSOPHY, LITERATURE

Observations on Many Matters in an Entertaining Book of Travel

By FRANCIS A. COLLINS.

ANY one unfamiliar with the personality or writings of Theodore Roosevelt, if such a one could be found, might well imagine his new book* to be the work of a syndicate of authors or perhaps an entire college faculty. Mr. Roosevelt's bewildering versatility has never found fuller expression than here. He has shown himself a "jack of all trades," and professions as well, and master of many. In its sub-title his book is defined as an "Account of the African Wanderings of an American Hunter-Naturalist." This, however, indicates but a small arc of the circle. The entire population of the jungle—and nothing escapes Mr. Roosevelt's attention—is passed in review, together with the natural history, botany, geology, and physical conditions of the country. His observation of native conditions, of the "white man's burden," and various problems of administration, of which Mr. Roosevelt speaks with high authority, might well be included in the title.

The object of Mr. Roosevelt's African expedition, it is explained repeatedly, was purely scientific. It was undertaken primarily to collect birds, mammals, reptiles, and plants, and especially big game for the National Museum at Washington and the Natural History Museum of New York. No game of any kind was shot except for scientific purposes or for food. On this subject Mr. Roosevelt pays his compliments to a certain class of critics in a characteristic sentence. "Game butchery," he writes, "is as objectionable as any other form of wanton cruelty or barbarity, but to protest against all hunting of game is a sign of softness of head, and not soundness of heart."

The geography of the trip is comparatively simple. Mr. Roosevelt, his son, Kermit, and three naturalists landed at Mombasa, on the east coast of Africa, and, first by rail and afterward by caravan, proceeded in a general northwesterly direction, crossing the Victoria Nyanza, and finally reaching the upper waters of the Nile. Several side trips, seven in all, were made for hunting purposes. On the day after the party emerged from the jungle at Khartoum, after a year's travel, Mr. Roosevelt dispatched to his publishers the final chapters, appendices, preface, and title of his book.

The railroad out of Mombasa carried the party at once into the jungle. Seated on the cowcatcher—strangely misnamed in the jungle—Mr. Roosevelt enjoyed the "most interesting railroad journey in the world," as they sped through a "naturalist's wonderland," or a "vast zoological garden." One day the engine ran over a hyena, and previously the train had actually killed a lion, and the engineer had brought in the head in triumph. "Mishaps," Mr. Roosevelt observes, "such as could only happen to a railroad in the Pleistocene." During this trip the natives were objects of especial interest, and Mr. Roosevelt closes a long account with the remark that, "To an American, who necessarily must think much of the race problem at home, it is pleasant to be made to realize in vivid fashion the progress the American negro has made by comparing him with the negro who dwells in Africa untouched, or but lightly touched by white influence."

The party found their caravan awaiting them at a little station well inland on the Kapiti Plains. The equipment necessary for traversing the jungle and for preparing the animals suggested a military expedition. More than 200 men must be employed to carry the tents and provisions. Incident-

TRUE KINSWOMAN OF COLERIDGE

Fantastic Personality and Art Revealed in the Poet's Niece, Who Was "Like a Blake Picture"

AMERICAN readers are not apt to have met with much of Mary Coleridge's work, though she contributed for many years to the English literary weeklies, and this volume of her prose* will come as a revelation of an eerie and exquisite talent. Something of the fantastic ruled Miss Coleridge's art, with what one might almost describe as a kind of desperate desire of her spirit to express itself in human terms, a desire that could not fulfill itself in the ordinary ways of life, but must have recourse to spells and incantations; like the strained efforts of a fairy caught inside a magic, invisible circle to escape to its kind, who appear so close at hand and yet are incommunicably removed.

The book is prefaced by a sketch not so much of the events of Miss Coleridge's life as of her personality, written by Edith Sichel, who was an intimate friend of Mary's—and evidently Mary possessed a genius for friendship. It was her closest approach to actual human intercourse, suiting the essential isolation of her spirit that yearned constantly to give itself:—

> About the little chambers of my heart
> Friends have been coming—going—many a year.
> The door stands open there.
> Some, lightly stepping, enter; some depart.

So she wrote. She needed friends, not a friend, and gave to each the same generous and yet aloof devotion. But she required solitude, too. "Solitude is so exciting," she wrote, after a long time spent in loneliness.

Mary's was a life lived in the shade, with such pale sunbeams to light it as might sift through the fervid boughs that drank the full sunlight far above. An extreme sensitiveness developed in this half light, so that her existence, if delicate and frail, did not lack intensity. Through books and pictures, "things," which, as she confessed, she preferred to people, came her experiences, as well as through that intuitive perception granted certain natures, by virtue of which they live in the joys or the griefs of those they love. Mary's sympathy was so great that the triumph of any one she cared for "intoxicated her." And in sorrow, as in joy, she identified herself with her friend.

But though intuition in such a woman as Emily Brontë could create characters and a passion not surpassed in all literature, in Mary it gave birth to something more translucent, chillier than actual life; lovely, certainly, but still unreal. "She had," says her biographer, "an almost paradoxical conviction of the fictitiousness of fact." One might rather say that she was not herself fact, and that, looking in on life, as it were, from some other dimension, it never became tangible to her. She looked "very much like one of the women in Blake's pictures." That is how she should have looked, with her shy sincerity, her whimsical gayety and quick but shadowy enthusiasms, her effect of a spirit rather than a body.

Lives like hers are not so unimportant as their slight impress on the huge bulk of the world might lead one to imagine. Like the gossamer seeds borne on chance winds to a desert spot to germinate and die, and to be followed in good time by sturdier plants capable of sustaining life, so these tenuous personalities attain new regions of the spirit, where until then bodily presences had not trod, and become the frail forerunners of more robust descendants, creating a foothold by their disappearance, broadening the foundation on which man rears his house of life.

Not that Mary Coleridge is to be conceived of as a sickly and diaphanous figure through whom one might be tempted to stick a tentative finger in the half-assured conviction that there was nothing there. She was there, and she was occupied in any number of actual worldly doings, even to the extent of holding classes for working women. But though not a weakling or unhealthy, she nevertheless experienced life in a rarefied manner, as though on heights above the normal levels. One result of this elevation was an atmosphere of pellucid sincerity, an atmosphere that was the very breath of her life.

Humor, too, this delicate lady possessed, the humor of appreciation that sees and smiles at itself and others, and perceives the incongruities that so make life worth while. She appraised herself severely, and, as Lowell said of Lincoln, dreaded praise, not blame. At 26 she wrote:

> What do I know of the world? • • • Nothing. I have not even learned its alphabet. Thirteen years out of the twenty-six have I lived in books, and yet I understand them not much better. • • • I have no imagination enough to understand fact, nor experience enough to comprehend fiction. And, again, I have no fairy godmother, but I can lay claim to a fairy great-uncle, which is perhaps the reason that I am condemned to wander restlessly around the gates of Fairyland, although I have never yet passed them.

This fairy ancestor was, of course, the poet Coleridge, and something of him undoubtedly lived again in his great-niece.

A number of essays, stories, extracts from letters and diaries, and a few hitherto unpublished poems make up the bulk of the volume. The prose portions have most of them appeared in the Cornhill, the London Times Literary Supplement, and other English publications. The essays are chiefly on literary subjects. In many of them a whimsical, amusing playfulness tosses lightly on the sea of deeper feeling that flows through all Miss Coleridge's work; for heart she possessed, and, though she had the passion for learning, and knew Greek, Hebrew and Latin, together with several modern languages, she was never lost in the arid wastes of mere intellectualism. Her stories reveal a tender, iridescent sort of romance, a certain poignancy, sometimes a Poe-like quality. Her style is flexible, she feels the value of words and delights in harmonious construction, but she is more poet than prose writer. She is never precious, but one perceives that she liked the color of phrases, and got a satisfaction from them equal to that of a painter's in putting color by color on his canvas.

The passages from the letters, etc., have the special charm of the more intimate expression belonging to them. There are bits of criticism in them that reveal the mind of their author more than the longer essays, and comments on people and emotions and ideas that witness to a fine discrimination. In contrasting Ibsen with the Greeks, after reading "Ghosts," she says:

> It seems to me rank where a Greek play would be strong. • • • The Greeks are wild to kill themselves because they have outraged convention, the Scandinavians are wild to kill convention because it has outraged them.

Other reflections that catch the eye in turning the pages are:

> How far we are from each other. Two walls of flesh between me and the nearest person on earth. Even the eyes mysterious.
>
> Woman with a big W bores me supremely. • • • A woman I know, but what on earth is Woman?
>
> Snow mountains have never fascinated me. Switzerland seems to me to have got no heart. • • • I'm a stranger among mountains. I am at home in a flat, skiey land.
>
> Light has such different ways with it. In some places it lies, in some it falls, in some it strikes.
>
> I have been reading Rossetti's letters, and Matthew Arnold's. There's just this difference between them, that Rossetti was a poet, and Matthew Arnold a man who wrote poetry. • • •

There is an appendix, containing the "Table Talk of William Cory," being notes taken by Mary during the Greek classes held for her and a few more. Cory, or Johnson, to give him his real name, was the author of the poem "Ionica," and the "Outlines of English History," a lifelong friend of the Coleridges, and one of those scholars with the real passion for the ancients who belonged to the past generation. The notes give him to the reader as a man of a quick and far-reaching mind and a deep personal charm.

The book is one to take up at odd moments in quiet hours, and to linger over, once opened. One is glad of it, for it reveals truly and simply a gracious and exquisite spirit. Miss Sichel has accomplished her part with taste and judgment, illuminated by enthusiasm, putting in just enough explanation and comment as shall make the volume adequate.

CHEVALIER BAYARD

IN GOOD and simple English Miss Amy G. Andrews has condensed the story of the famous chevalier ("The Story of Bayard," John Lane Co.) from that French classic, the "Histoire du Bon Chevalier Bayard," written by his anonymous "Loyal Serviteur." She manages in a small space to give her boy and girl readers a fair idea of the best side of that great and good man who in the opinion of his contemporaries justly earned the title of the "knight without fear and without reproach." An older reader may wickedly amuse himself when she finds occasional difficulty in reconciling mediaeval ideals with more modern ones, but she never falters in her self-imposed task save when she comes face to face with certain facts in the career of this knight of "unblemished character" and "purity of life." Then she averts her eyes and passes onward. What else could she do?

MARX, FOUNDER OF SOCIALISM

Mr. Spargo's Interesting Account of the Achievements and Career of the Author of "Das Kapital"

By JOSEPH JACOBS.

MR. SPARGO, who is well-known for his many writings upon socialism, has written the first extensive life of the great founder of the modern socialistic system which has appeared in English.* Indeed there is nothing at all satisfactory written on the subject in any language. This is to be accounted for, to some extent, by the fact that Marx wrote most of his important works in German, while he passed most of his life in England. Mr. Spargo has been very industrious in collecting information, not alone from printed sources but also from the surviving friends and correspondents of the great socialist leader, who was born in 1818 and died in 1883. Altogether this work is likely to be, for a long time to come, the standard authority for the details of Karl Marx's outward existence.

We learn of his birth as the son of a Jewish lawyer at Treves in Germany, who became converted to Christianity when Marx was six years old, and his father desired to have a career in the Prussian law courts, which would be denied to him if he retained his ancestral faith. Young Marx was well educated and seems to have been a handsome and attractive youth who fell in love with the daughter of Baron Von Westphalen who, after the usual crosses of young love's path, became his helpmate and provided a true home for the stormy agitator. Marx became affiliated with the Left or extreme radical wing of the followers of Hegel, the great German philosopher, and, like most radicals of his time, became obnoxious to the Prussian bureaucracy. He was forced to flee from his native land and took refuge for a time in Paris, whence he was driven to Brussels and ultimately to London, where most of his life was spent.

Marx had a clear mind and a sharp pen and earned a precarious living by political journalism which brought him in contact with most of the advanced thinkers of the Continent, like Feuerbach, Bruno Bauer, Heine, and, above all, with F. Engels, who became his lifelong friend and literary executor. In later years he got to know Bakunin and Mazzini and the leaders of the Revolutionary movement of 1848. With most of these he quarreled; and a good deal of Mr. Spargo's book is taken up with the details of the bickerings, which have, for the most part, lost their interest.

Marx appears to have been of a very jealous and domineering nature and could bear no rival near the throne. He was a considerable wire-puller and much of his quarrelings were due to his rather underhanded way of dealing with his opponents or even his friends. The man had many attractive qualities which attract a large following; but to retain his friendship his friends had to be content to remain his followers.

Marx owes his importance in the history of the nineteenth century to three significant views, of which he was the first or the most prominent exponent, and to one exploit of organization. These three views were, the economic or materialistic conception of history, his view of the age as a capitalistic organization, and his doctrine of value as due solely to labor. These are the bases of his socialism, which has, theoretically at least, dominated all socialistic theories since the appearance of his epoch-making work, "Das Kapital." In all these views he had predecessors—Feuerbach, on the materialistic view of history, Saint Simon on socialism, and Ricardo and Thompson on surplus values. But the combination of the three was original to Marx and gave him his prominent position in the history of socialism. His work is compared by Mr. Spargo to that of Darwin in the realm of biology, and the comparison is so far justified that Marx based his views on a very wide induction of facts derived mainly from the English "blue books." It was his residence in London and access to the British Museum Library that enabled Marx to obtain the material for his chief work and forced him to remain in England when his poverty and his state of health would have counseled a retreat to Switzerland.

It cannot be said that Mr. Spargo has given any very adequate account of Marx's chief work, and this is a serious lacuna in a work dealing with the life of a thinker, in whose thoughts we are probably more interested than in the outer details of his life. It is possible, however, that Mr. Spargo has dealt with this subject elsewhere in his works on socialism and thought it unnecessary to go into detail in the biography. It would, however, have been interesting to have some account of the masterpiece of Marx and some criticism of its contents, which have scarcely stood the research of later years and have been much modified, even in socialistic circles. Mr. Spargo refers occasionally to these modifications but assumes too much knowledge of them in his readers.

Marx's greatest exploit in the world of politics was his creation of the International Working Men's Association, which, for the first time, brought together the foremost representatives of the chief leaders of the working classes throughout the civilized world. This was indeed a great achievement, and Marx's name will always be associated with it. The "International," as it was shortly called, was much discredited by the doings of the Commune in Paris after the Franco-Prussian War, and was dissolved by Marx himself so as to prevent it falling into the hands and under the influence of Bakunin, the Russian Nihilist. Marx did this in a characteristic way by removing its headquarters to America where, of course, leaders of European workmen's associations, who are mostly poor, could not attend the meetings, so that it soon ceased to exist. But the idea of common action by the workingmen of different countries had taken firm root and is likely to be heard of more insistently as time goes on.

Altogether Mr. Spargo's hero has many points of interest, most of which are brought out in this well-written narrative. Unfortunately, as in most modern biographies, very little attention is paid to those minute details of outward appearance and characteristic gesture which give life to a life. This is, to some extent, remedied by a series of excellent portraits of Marx at different stages of his career. One wonders whether he dyed his mustache, which looks very black amidst his wealth of white hair. The book is also adorned with portraits of many of Marx's friends and disciples, notably an excellent one of Ferdinand Lasalle.

*KARL MARX, HIS LIFE AND WORK. By John Spargo. New York: B. W. Huebsch.

MEXICAN YEAR BOOK

THE "MEXICAN YEAR BOOK for 1909-10" (Carr Bros., 32 Broadway, New York, $6) offers an immense amount of statistical, financial, and economic information concerning our southern neighbor compiled from official and other sources. There are reviews of the present state of and recent legislation about agriculture, mining, trade, and manufactures, railways, banking, and currency. A very complete summary of the history of Mexico fills over fifty closely printed pages. Thirty pages give a detailed account of the history and present status of the government's finance. A copy of the constitution is followed by an account of the organization and personnel of the government and its relations with foreign nations. A few pages and a map are devoted to each of the states and territories.

AN UNPROFITABLE TALE

VICTOR VANE, the author of "The Bankruptcy of Bryan Kane," (Bates Publishing Co., Rochester, N. Y.,) calls his novel a "fragment of human history." By this he means that substantially it is a true story of a man's life, and he contends that that is just what a novel should be. "It is time," he sapiently remarks in his foreword, "for us of the twentieth century to look realities straight in the face," and, practicing what he preaches, he proceeds in his novel to give us the painful and revolting details of a weak, selfish, immoral, despicable, and hideous life. We can frame no theory that justifies the publication of this story; there is nothing pleasurable nor profitable in it.

CIVIL WAR TALE BY MR. CHAMBERS

In "Ailsa Paige" He Develops, with Accustomed Skill, What Is for Him a New Theme.

By CARTER IRVING.

WAR'S alarums, the muster with music and banners, the stricken field, and the grisly horrors of the army hospital—these are the things for which in his latest romance* Mr. Robert W. Chambers has deserted the luxury of millionaires' palaces, the silk-lined fascinations of the restless daughters of Midas, and their hothouse love affairs with stock brokers or dipsomaniac scions of the Knickerbockers in New York, at Palm Beach, in the Adirondacks, and at week-end places on Long Island. Thus the latest gowns from Paris (along with the pink pajamas of a more fantastic stage of Mr. Chambers's career as a story teller) give place to the hoopskirt of our grandmothers and the grip of besetting sins—hereditary or born of opulence and aimlessness—yield to the strong passion of civil strife and the high emotion of patriotism. For the story has for its theme the war between North and South.

No doubt there is distinct gain in wholesomeness in the shift of scene; the turning back of the clock to a time when young women—even very rich young women in society—had something better to do than dress and flirt, something nobler to struggle with than an infantile taste for French perfumery as a beverage.

With Mr. Chambers's name on the title page, it seems hardly necessary to say that the passion of love plays a very fervid part in this war tale and burns as fiercely in the soft breast of the heroine as in the bitter Byronic bosom of the hero. In fact, though the romance is of an age when lovely woman was supposed to wait patiently to be wooed and won, the wooing here is all done by the widow who gives her name to the book.

It is, by the way, something of a departure for Mr. Chambers to make a widow his heroine. As for the hero, we have said that his bosom was Byronic. He nurses the cruel wrong of his birth and seeks to lighten his gloom with riotous living. The widow, however, is resolved to make a man of him and have him for her own. With the assistance of the war she accomplishes at least a part of her purpose.

The story paints a picture of the hectic days in New York just before and just after Fort Sumter was fired upon, shows the volunteers starting gaily to the front arrayed as for a fancy ball in copies of all the uniforms of Europe—zouaves, lancers, hussars, dragoons—what not. Then it shows a mob, instead of an army, floundering in the red Virginia mud—and war and wounds and death. If old soldiers' tales are true Mr. Chambers has done very well indeed with this picture. It is merely the background for his passionate romance, of course, but he has taken pains with it and put color and life into it.

Flung across the wild love theme, too, is the picture of a Southern woman whose adored Northern husband and Northern-bred son are fighting in the blue against the gray, which stands for the cause she clings to with a passion of loyalty which, if one had not seen it in real Southern women, one might pronounce utterly strained and theatrical—fit only for a Belasco melodrama. Again, there is a pretty young woman who has emerged from a music hall to become an army nurse—a very childish and appealing figure. There is a grim old Colonel—there is a preposterous coward and villain. And, finally, there is the widow.

The widow is an army nurse, a rich volunteer, who has left her house in London Terrace — then Fashion's haunt on Twenty-third Street—to do her duty—and forget. She is one who loves her country only one degree less whole-heartedly than her hero, and links them both in a trinity with God. There you have the old-fashioned romance, to which Mr. Chambers adds an amorous abandon which the old-fashioned romancers were apt to avoid. The fervor of the embraces in Mr. Chambers's novels has long been celebrated.

For the rest there are battle scenes—the charge, the mêlée, the retreat amid the appeals and curses of wrecked and dying comrades; descriptions of the shambles in the field hospitals; visions of bedsides cheered by woman's gentle presence; pages on pages of rescues and long marches and dramatic encounters of a lady and a gentleman who are too much interested in their feelings about each other to behave at all sensibly—in short, all the stage furniture of this sort of story.

The situation upon which the plot rests is preposterous, the narrative is padded with what a cynical reader called "slush, mush, and gush"—and yet—and yet—Mr. Chambers has made his tale so interesting that very many people have already read it as it came out serially and many more will read it now that it is bound into a book.

*AILSA PAIGE. A Novel. By Robert W. Chambers. Illustrated. New York: D. Appleton & Co. $1.50.

"FANNY LAMBERT"

TO BE at once extravagant and impecunious is something which only a young woman resembling Fanny Lambert could achieve gracefully. The heroine of H. De Vere Stacpoole's new novel (imported by R. F. Fenno & Co., $1.50) is a decidedly charming young person, but one with quite as much sense of responsibility as a very youthful kitten. However, she was "a dark-haired girl of that lost type which recalls La Cruche Cassée and the Love-in-April conceptions of Fragonard, exquisitely pretty and exquisitely dressed," so a great deal might be forgiven her, no doubt.

Fanny was in love with a penniless artist; she had an extremely disputatious father—another charming person, with an equal sense of responsibility—and in her endeavor to guide him out of a lawsuit, she wins the heart of her lover's elderly uncle, and arouses a passionate admiration in the breast of her very correct and pompous cousin.

The novel has all the depth of a farce—or let us say a comedy by Somerset Maugham; it is full of irresponsible fun, yet at bottom it displays some cleverness in catching salient features of character, and exaggerating them to just the proper farcical degree. The conversation is witty, and each of the persons concerned in the slight plot adds to the general hilarity. It is not possible to take "Fanny Lambert" very seriously, yet Mr. Stacpoole's cleverness must be admitted. His heroine is very lovable, in spite of—or perhaps because of—her unconventionality and her lack of what the moralists call "moral fibre."

It is all very delightful fooling, and the laughter it arouses has just enough of the mental in it to be tonic. The story is pleasantly suited for vacation reading or for any time, indeed, when one has an hour or two in which to smile at the foibles of one's fellow beings.

"THE HOUSE ON STILTS"

ROBINSON CRUSOE is tame, and the lives of our kindly friends, the Swiss Family, uneventful compared with the rapid fire of peril, adventure, and violent death furnished by "The House on Stilts" by R. H. Hazard (G. W. Dillingham Co., $1.50). The book opens with the orthodox shipwreck, casting an autobiographical hero and his companions upon the volcanic island of Gabrielle, where in the pretty daughter of the American Consul this hero finds his fate. A defaulting bank president, a detective, dumb monks, a Yellow Queen, a "dog man," Voodoos, Spaniards, crowd the scene, and make things lively. It would not have been easy to contrive more complications or to invent more exciting occurrences. And that is just the trouble with the story. Event so treads on the heels of event that the reader's interest wearies of being continually whipped into action. The tale would be more thrilling, were there fewer thrills. It will, no doubt, appeal to the uncritical, whose chief demand is that in their fiction as in their life there shall be "something doing."

MR. STACPOOLE'S YOUTHS

No PEOPLE are more fascinating in a book, or more maddening out of one, than such youths as "Dodor" and "Zouzou" of the forgotten "Trilby." We have something like the recrudescence of these madcap irresponsibles in Mr. H. De Vere Stacpoole's Frenchmen as presented in his delightful little skit, "Le Bourgeois," (Brentano's). How a very green medical student from Kansas City falls into their hands, and all that comes of it makes a mirth-provoking tale, not without the "lacrimae rerum"; the reward that misses the worker, and comes to the selfish and the idle; the inevitable harvest of the merry sowing of wild oats. Nevertheless, the smile predominates. The little story is a delicious literary vol-au-vent, made with a light hand, and melting in one's mouth. Full of cleverness and charm, it cannot fail of an appeal to every one who has been "an inmate of that pleasant lunatic asylum, over whose portal is written 'Youth.'"

MR. MEEK "A REAL ENTITY"

George E. Meek Writes from Vancouver Telling of His Literary Work

IN view of the doubt that has been expressed regarding the authorship of "George Meek: Bath-Chairman, Written by Himself," the following letter received from Vancouver is of interest. In behalf of the writer of this letter, it should be said that a statement by Mr. H. G. Wells in emphatic denial of his (Mr. Wells's) authorship of the book in question was published in THE TIMES SATURDAY REVIEW for July 23.

Hill Crest P. O.
Vancouver, B. C., Aug. 18.

To the Literary Editor of The New York Times:

I note with much gratification and, you will, I hope, forgive me for saying so, a little amusement the comments upon my book "George Meek: Bath-Chairman" in your issue of Saturday, June 25th, which some one kindly sent me. While I am rather proud to find that my work in that volume was of such a quality as to have led critics to imagine it to have been executed by my very great friend Mr. H. G. Wells, I must confess to being a very real entity. With the exception of the signed introduction and one paragraph, (with which I did not agree,) which Mr. Wells interpolated, that work is entirely my own.

I am under engagement with Messrs. Constable & Co. to write two more books for them. One is nearly complete, and will be published early in the Fall; the second next Spring. I am also commissioned to write for The London Evening News and one or two other English journals. Later, when I get my next book dispatched to London and have the other a bit in hand, if I could get in touch with a good American lecturing agency, I should be open to undertake a short lecturing tour in the larger cities of the United States.

My father was killed in the Brooklyn Theatre fire in '76, and I have two brothers who are American citizens. One of whom is resident in South Aberdeen, Wash. GEORGE E. MEEK.

P. S.—The first edition of my book had sold out in London by the beginning of July, and, a second was on the market. I trust Duttons were equally successful in New York. G. E. M.

"I regard this book as a serious thing. I have put my best into it."

DARWIN'S THEORY LOSING GROUND

Recent Studies in Evolution Have Modified in Some Respects the Famous Law of Natural Selection

By Dr. IRVING W. VOORHEES.

THE theory of evolution is one of the most interesting with which science has to deal. It is therefore not surprising that books setting forth its various and varying phases have, during the past few years, followed each other in quick succession and that, owing to its relative newness, and the introduction of light from other sources, there is much of contradiction and uncertainty still manifest in the discussions of evolutionists. The evolutionary theory, on account of its comprehensiveness, is a most difficult one. The facts needed for its confirmation are brought together from all departments of human knowledge and involve therefore a study of the entire universe, from its origin to the present time.

It is for the purpose of bringing such knowledge as we have thoroughly up to date that Mr. Lock has published this excellent volume.* He has delved widely and deeply into his subject, and details what he has found with due regard to the sense of perspective, and to the importance of the facts. He makes it evident that Darwin's Theory of Natural Selection is no longer in such good standing among the majority of scientists as formerly, and this change, he shows, has been brought about largely through the establishment of Mendel's Law and De Vries' Mutation Theory.

Darwin held firmly to the conviction that nature does not advance by leaps and bounds, or, as he expressed it, Natura non facit saltum. Prof. Huxley, however, whose keen intelligence penetrated to the very depths of the matter, said in his review of Darwin's "Origin of Species":

> We believe that nature does make jumps now and then, and the recognition of the fact is of no small importance in disposing of many minor objections to the doctrine of transmutation.

The terms "Natural Selection" and the "Survival of the Fittest" are not sufficient to explain the processes of development in nature, for it is frequently seen that this development takes place out of a direct line; that is, without parent relationship, to what has immediately preceded. Moreover, there has been a growing conviction that the phrase "inheritance of acquired characters," invented by Herbert Spencer, is likewise open to grave challenge, since it can be proven that evolution has proceeded by discontinuity of inheritance; that is, by the aid of discontinuous variations in heredity. This discontinuous process has for many years been the common belief, but to De Vries belongs the credit of having brought it prominently forward through his experiments and observations on plants. The consensus of opinion among experts is that acquired characters are not inherited at all, except where the better nutrition of the parent may lead to the production of more vigorous offspring.

Mendel's Law of Inheritance, enunciated in 1865, while of great importance to the scientific student, is rather difficult of comprehension. It is based on the fact that > male and female germ-cells of hybrid plants contain each of them one or the other member only of any pair of differentiating characters exhibited by the parents, and that each member of such a pair of characters is represented in an equal number of germ-cells of both sexes.

Mr. Lock considers Mendel's discovery the connecting link between various divergent branches of genetics, or the study of hereditary phenomena in organisms. He says: "It is the writer's avowed opinion that Mendel's brief paper ["Researches concerning Hybrid Plants"] is the most important contribution of its size which has ever been made to biological science," and he states the belief that every department of the plant and animal breeding industries must sooner or later benefit by this great law.

The object of Mr. MacNamara's work* is to explain the evolution of and functions performed by those elements of protoplasm which are necessary to purposive, instinctive, and psychic phenomena. The author believes that knowledge thus derived will aid in realizing the importance of heredity in determining the personal character of individuals. He makes the rather remarkable statement that the living substance of the amoeba retains impressions made upon it by certain stimuli to such an extent that "the movements of these minute particles of protoplasm are not only purposive, but are, to some extent, guided by memory and experience." The first part of this volume gives biological and anatomical evidence to demonstrate the nature of the living matter out of which personal, mental, and physical qualities are elaborated. The second part of the book puts these conclusions to the test by setting forth the characteristics in a long line of individuals living under conditions adapted to show the influence of one generation on the immediately succeeding one. The people described in illustrations of Mr. MacNamara's theory dwelt in a well-defined part of Ireland now known as County Clare. Students of ethnology will find the chapter devoted to this subject a very interesting one.

Mr. MacNamara has done his work well, and while some will object that he does not prove his case in its entirety, he furnishes much mental pabulum for those who are students of the phenomena which he analyzes.

ally some four tons of salt had to be carried for preserving the skins.

To guard against the danger of attack by wild animals the camp was organized and patroled as on a military expedition. The picture of this tented town, which was Mr. Roosevelt's home for many months, is vivid:

> The tents were pitched in long lines, he writes, in the first of which stood my tent, flanked by those of the other white men and by the dining tent. In the next line were the cook tent, the provision tent, the store tent, the skinning tent, and the like; and then came the lines of small white tents for the porters. Between each line of tents was a broad street. In front of our tents in the first line an askri was always pacing to and fro, and when night fell we would kindle a camp fire and sit around it under the stars. * * * Here and there were larger fires around which the gun-bearers drew or groups of askris or saises might gather. * * * After a while the talk and laughter would gradually die away, and as we white men sat around the fire, the silence was unbroken except by the queer cry of a hyena or much more rarely by the sound that always demanded attention, the yawning grunt of a questioning lion.

The party plunged at once into the heart of the jungle. The book offers such a wealth of matter descriptive of the hunting of every conceivable variety of game that it is difficult to make a selection. Mr. Roosevelt's first lion will serve as a typical "kill." The party found themselves one day peering into a patch of tall grass, from which issued ominous sounds of terrifying volume. A moment later, as Mr. Roosevelt elsewhere remarks, they "came out biling":

> I sprang to one side, writes Mr. Roosevelt, and for a second or two we waited, uncertain whether we should see the lion charging out ten yards distant or running away. Fortunately it adopted the latter course. Right in front of me, thirty yards off, it appeared, from behind the bushes which at first had screened him, the tawny, galloping form of a big, maneless lion. Crack, the Winchester spoke. The soft-nosed bullet plunged forward through his flank; the lion swerved so that I missed him with the second shot, but the third bullet went through his spine, and forward into his chest. Down he came, sixty yards off, his hindquarters dragging, his head up, his ears back, his jaws opening, and his lips drawn up into a prodigious snarl, as he endeavored to turn to face us. His back was broken, but of this we could not at the moment be sure, and if it had been merely grazed he might have recovered and then, even though dying, his charge might have done mischief. So Kermit, Sir Alfred, and I, almost together, fired into his chest. His head sank and he died.

There are scores of similar adventures with lions, hippopotami, rhinoceroses, hyenas, every variety of game big and little. To the layman in such matters it is sometimes difficult to follow Mr. Roosevelt in his tireless enthusiasm, but the subject changes so quickly that the narrative never drags.

In the course of his travels Mr. Roosevelt visited many missions, which interested him deeply. It may come as a surprise to many to find him an ardent advocate of foreign mission work. He recurs to the subject again and again, but a few sentences indicate his point of view:

> Those who complain of or rail at missionary work in Africa and who confine themselves to pointing out the undoubtedly too numerous errors of the missionaries or shortcomings of their flocks would do well to consider that even if the light which had been let in is but feeble and gray it has at least dispelled a worse than Stygian darkness. Where, as in Uganda, the people are intelligent and the missionaries unite disinterestedness and zeal with common sense, the result is astounding.

In the records of receptions and entertainments one may read between the lines of the fame which had preceded Mr. Roosevelt to the most remote parts of Africa. One delightful story, which we can imagine Mr. Roosevelt telling with a characteristic smile, is dated from Ndorobo:

> When we camped in these high forests the woods after nightfall were vocal with the croaking and wailing of the tree hyraxes. They are squat, woolly, funny things and to my great amusement I found that most of the settlers called them Teddy Bears.

Mr. Roosevelt has high praise for the English rule in Africa:

> The Wakamba, he writes, for instance, are as yet not sufficiently advanced to warrant their sharing in the smallest degree in the common Government; the "just consent of the governed" in their case, if taken literally, would mean idleness, famine, and endless internecine warfare. They cannot govern themselves from within, therefore they must be governed from without, and their need is met in highest fashion by firm and just control, of the kind, on the whole, they are now getting.
>
> And, again, the English rule in Africa has been of incalculable benefit to Africans themselves. Mistakes have been made, of course, but they have proceeded at least as often from an unwise effort to accomplish too much in the way of beneficence as from a desire to exploit the natives.

In selecting his library for this long journey Mr. Roosevelt inevitably reveals his most intimate literary convictions. The series of books chosen was called the "Pig Skin Library," from the special binding selected to withstand rough usage on the march. The original list comprised one or more works from a list of some thirty-seven authors, while half as many more were added during the journey. The authors include such widely contrasted names as Shakespeare, Spencer, Marlow, Mahan, Macaulay, Homer, Chanson de Roland, Nibelungenlied, Carlyle, Shelley, Bacon, Lowell, Emerson, Longfellow, Tennyson, Poe, Keats, Milton, Dante, Holmes, Bret Harte, Browning, Crothers, Mark Twain, Bunyon, Euripides, The Federalist, Gregorovius, Scott, Cooper, Froissart, Thackeray, Dickens, and the Bible.

In an appendix Mr. Roosevelt discusses very frankly the claims of a rival, the famous "Five Foot Library," suggested by Dr. Charles W. Eliot. He frankly states that several of the books which Dr. Eliot has placed on a five-foot shelf he, Roosevelt, would not put on a fifty-foot shelf. Thus he declares:

> I think it slightly absurd to compare any list of good books with any other list of good books in the sense of saying that one list is better or worse than another. * * * There is no such thing as the hundred best books or the best five-foot library, but there can be drawn up a very large number of lists, each of which shall contain a hundred good books or fill a five-foot library. * * * The question is largely one of the personal equation. * * * Let us be modest about dogmatising overmuch. * * * There are very many thousands of good books, some of them meet one man's need, some another's, and any list of such books should simply be accepted as meeting a given individual's needs under given conditions of time and surroundings.

These pages gain interest of association in being dated from Khartoum.

Mr. Roosevelt's latest book exemplifies the virtues as well as the limitations of its author's literary style, and both his admirers and critics will find in it material for renewed argument. In the well-nigh interminable discussions as to the "Roosevelt style," the best possible authority seems to have been overlooked, namely, Mr. Roosevelt himself. We have his repeated assurance—comforting, to say the least—that he is not a genius, and that his success is due to the possession of familiar traits of character and temperament and of abundant energy. Certainly, no contemporary writer on either side of the Atlantic has coined more words and phrases which pass current among us. It is very high praise of any style, moreover, that it should have been employed with such conspicuous success in setting forth such widely contrasted subject matter. A masterpiece of prose Mr. Roosevelt's latest book is not. In its perusal, however, one enjoys a very pleasant if not brilliant record of travel couched in a style direct and pliable. In a word, "African Game Trails" is a piece of work frequently lightened by touches of genius and always readable.

LITERARY NOTES FROM PARIS

Critics Discuss Evolution of the French Novel—Modern Paris and Feminine Beauty—New Books.

A FEW years ago in the "Revue de l'Art pour Tous," Lucien Jean wrote, "The French novel, which has been a noble, complete and vigorous form of art, seems to be dying, wretched and decomposed," and, latterly, it has become almost fashionable to refer deprecatingly to "the death-agony of the novel." A Paris bookseller's monthly, "L'Echo Bibliographique du Boulevard," is at present holding a highly suggestive symposium upon the actual situation and the prospects of the novel, in which only the younger writers, who are supposed to represent the latest tendencies in fiction, are taking part. The opinions expressed thus far are nearly all optimistic. They recognize that contemporaneous novelists are averse to forming schools and wearing labels, after the manner of their predecessors. They admit that there are well-nigh as many tendencies as there are conspicuous personalities. But they deny that this diversity of aim and attitude is a sign of decadence. They detect something good in the novel of the present and predict something better for the novel of the future. They agree, for the most part, that the distinguishing trait of the novel that is emerging is a sort of chastened idealism, or, what comes practically to the same thing, a sort of refined and spiritualized realism:

> I long thought, says Eugène Montfort, ex-prophet of Naturalism, that Flaubert's impersonal method of observation alone should guide us. I begin to perceive that this method is a good deal of an illusion. * * * The typical new novel, being less impersonal, is less stiff, less cold than the novel according to the formula of Flaubert. But the rôle of realism in it is considerable. It is characterized by precision of detail and exactness of imagination. * * * The influence of Romanticism is also discernible. * * * Add to these widely differing factors the need, communicated to us by the Russian novelists, of being closer to our personages, more intimate with them than were the writers of the preceding period, and you will conclude that there is something decidedly new in the contemporary novel and that it is evolving rapidly. * * * Marcel Schwob used to speak of "the novel of adventure in the largest sense of the word, the novel of the crises of the inner and outer world." It is not impossible that the combined influences of Realism, of Romanticism and of the Russians will conduct the coming great novelist to this result.

Emile Moselly (who was given the Goncourt Prize in 1907 for a delicious study of the life of Lorraine) detects in the seemingly contradictory efforts of the younger writers a tendency toward a higher form:

> The novel that is being thus evolved, he explains, is a novel of a new realism, a superior realism, a realism which accords a place to idealism, to sensibility, to lyrism, which depicts the life of the soul as well as that of the senses.

Jean Viollis discerns salvation in the emancipation of the younger writers from the obsession of several baneful influences:

> It seems to be safe to affirm that neither the ill-humor of Naturalism nor the subtleties of the Barrésian egotism appear to satisfy the novelists of our generation. Composition is no longer regarded as the process of accumulating with ill grace sheets of inventories nor of exciting jaded sensibilities by perpetual ticklings. The young writer, if he does not always know exactly what he is going to do, has certain pronounced aversions. He holds himself aloof from Zola and from Barrès, on general principles. As to the rest, he has a suspicion that he should not write like the Goncourts, nor like Paul Adam for instance. This is already much; we must wait for the works to know more. But let us have confidence. For, at a time when social conflicts overshadow everything, there is scant room for petty psychological complications. * * * In the meantime, that precious quality which Romanticism crushed and which the Symbolists resuscitated only to chop it into bits, seems to be living again.

According to Emile Solari, the evolution of the novel is proceeding in the direction of human utility. "In literature, as in all other human enterprises," M. Solari declares, "everything that does not contribute to human progress, everything that is not useful is totally without significance, and may be neglected."

Edouard Quet declares suppleness to be the distinguishing trait of the novelist of the hour. He points out that the most contradictory subjects are treated by the same author with equal sincerity. "The novelist is no longer," he concludes, "a thinking lens. He is something better than that, because he assembles and organizes in a single work the most diverse sensations and visions because he fixes the fragile truths of the moment and unites them to a presentiment of the truths of the future."

Marcel Prévost's "Féminites," which deals subtly with the tweedle-de-dums and the tweedle-de-dees that make up the existence of the woman of fashion, affords a capital example of the peculiarly Parisian faculty for rendering futilities fascinating. The chapter likely to attract the most attention is called "Le Krach de la Beaute," a title which is absolutely untranslatable, but which may be crudely paraphrased as "The Passing of the Cult of Feminine Beauty." M. Prévost maintains that there has never been a period so indifferent to feminine beauty as the present. Despite the bluff of the magazines, no contemporaneous people and no contemporaneous city concerns itself with the beauty of woman. More surprising still, the people and the city which concern themselves the least therewith are the French and Paris. The cult of elegance has supplanted that of beauty.

The last essays of the late E. M. de Vogüé (revealer to France of the Russian novel and apostle of the religion of human suffering) have been gathered into a volume entitled, in accordance with his express wish, "Les Routes." These routes are not only the highroads of the three continents over which this indefatigable traveller was wont to range, but, they are, to use his own words, "the unknown paths which lead to the great sky-spaces, to the broad firmaments, everywhere where one may hope to mount, to spread one's wings, to fly away into the Beyond." The first half of the book, which carries the reader from Saint Petersburg to Assouan, includes studies of the Russian and the Turkish revolutions, subjects which a lifetime of investigations had specially qualified the author to treat. The second half consists mainly of vivid pen-portraits of his contemporaries (Brunetière, Aerenthal, Marcellin Albert, de Galliffet, &c.), whose personalities serve as points of departure for stimulating disquisitions upon the principal issues of life.

Other notable posthumous works of the season are: "Dans la Petite Ville," a series of touching pictures of the village life of central France by Charles-Louis Philippe, whose reputation has rapidly extended from the few to the many in the short time that has elapsed since his premature death; and "Les Jardins de l'Histoire," by Emile Gebhart, who possessed, like his fellow-savants, Gaston Paris and Gaston Boissier, a special gift for conferring charm upon erudition.

A recent work which reconstitutes the life of the ancients vividly, but somewhat more austerely than that of M. Gebhart, is "La Vie Politique de Sénèque," by René Walts. It is a vigorous defence of Seneca against the charge of hypocrisy and inconsistency in consenting to become the Minister of the monstrous Nero, of whom he had formerly been the tutor and of whom he was ultimately to be the victim. It avers that Seneca displayed genuine heroism in accepting public responsibilities to which he was disinclined temperamentally and which he would have certainly shunned had he not put the interests of his country above his own personal tastes. And it affirms that, even if Seneca's career as a politician be interpreted as a display of moral weakness, this lapse from his ideals was more than redeemed by the manner in which he accepted his tragic doom.

"La Florentine," by Maxime Formont (whose "Princesse de Venise" was one of the popular books of last year) is a happy reconstruction, in the form of fiction, of the Italian Renaissance. Several of the artists and famous people of that fascinating epoch figure in its pages. Two volumes by Sar Paladan, "Les Manuscrits de Léonard de Vinci" and "La Philosophie de Léonard de Vinci d'après ses Manuscrits" deal with the philosophical aspects of the Florence of the same brilliant period. Also "La Pensée Esotérique de Léonard de Vinci," by Paul Vulliaud.

"Héloise, Amante et Dupe d'Abélard—La Fin d'une Légende," by Maurice de Waleffe, is, as the title implies, an iconoclastic work, designed to discredit the famous mediaeval philosopher-lover. It portrays Abelard as vain, selfish, egotistical, cynical, brutal—the worst sort of a cad, in a word—and advances in support of this portrayal seemingly incontrovertible proofs.

The Balzac Museum at Passy, which has been open to the public for the last two years, was formally inaugurated with appropriate ceremonies on July 15. The poet Edmond Haraucourt presided, and addresses were made by a number of public functionaries and men of letters. Coffee was served from the coffee pot of the author of the "Comédie Humaine," and Henry Maret, veteran journalist and President of the Balzaciens, was accorded the honor of drinking in his cup.

"THE BEST BOOKS"

WILLIAM SWAN SONNENSCHEIN'S valuable work, "The Best Books," having been completely rewritten, is appearing in its third edition, arranged in three parts, each in a volume by itself. The work is meant to be a reader's guide to the "best available books" in all departments of science, art and literature. It takes note of about 100,000 publications, giving in each case the dates of the first and last editions and the price, size and publisher's name.

Part I. of the work, now ready, (G. P. Putnam's Sons, $3.50,) is subdivided into three classes—A, B, and C. Class A, relating to theology, contains 134 chapters with numerous paragraphs and sub-paragraphs; Class B, with 39 chapters, deals with mythology and folk-lore; Class C, having 75 chapters, takes up philosophy. Part II, which will be published within a very short time, has four sub-divisions relating to sociology, geography, history, and antiquities. Part III, scheduled to appear soon after the second part, also has four sub-divisions, treating of science, arts, and trades, literature, and philosophy.

As soon as all the parts shall have been published, the whole work will be issued also in a single volume, with one edition interleaved with thin opaque paper that may be used for writing down additions to the printed lists.

AMONG THE AUTHORS

ALBERT BIGELOW PAINE has resumed preparations for Mark Twain's biography since the publication of his own book of travel, "The Ship Dwellers," a couple of months ago. Mr. Paine, who makes occasional trips from Stormfield, the Twain place at Redding, Conn., to New York is one of the few authors who has been also a publisher, and on these trips he becomes, for the time being, a publisher again.

The Rev. Dr. RYAN is to deliver an address on "Legislative Remedies," at the National Conference of Catholic Charities to be held in Washington from Sept. 25 to Sept. 28. Dr. Ryan is the author of "A Living Wage: Its Ethical and Economic Aspects," a practical little volume with an introduction by Richard T. Ely.

GRACE MACGOWAN COOKE, author of "The Power and the Glory," which bears the fresh imprint of Doubleday, Page & Co., writes that she has received numerous inquiries concerning the pink moccasin flower mentioned in the earlier chapters of her story. The blossom is an orchid of the terrestrial variety, a Cypripedium, and was brought to her notice by a mountain girl. She wrote her story at her present home in California, and wishing to make very certain of the habitat and appearance of this flower, she applied to one of her mountain friends for assurance, receiving in answer a delicately penciled sketch of the flower and a description of it, which appears almost word for word in "The Power and the Glory."

Mrs. FLORENCE L. BARCLAY, author of "The Rosary," is expecting to arrive in New York by the White Star steamer Celtic on or about Sept. 3. Within a week or two after Mrs. Barclay's arrival her new novel, "The Mistress of Shenstone," will be published. In this story certain characters with which readers of "The Rosary" are familiar again make their appearance.

Mrs. MARGARET MORDECAI, though an American by birth, has for some time been making her home in England. She has traveled extensively in all parts of the East, with the result that she has become imbued with the spirit, and is in sympathy with many of the ideals of the Orient. Her recently published volume of short stories, entitled "The Flower of Destiny," is devoted to a depiction of life in Eastern lands. Not a few of the stories have their basis in fact or in tradition.

Mr. STEWART EDWARD WHITE has returned from the East to his Southern California home, near Santa Barbara. His forthcoming book, "The Rules of the Game," which has been running serially in the Sunset Magazine, will appear shortly in book form.

WILLIAM H. GREGG, who is a Scotchman by descent, has, in his new volume entitled "Controversial Issues in Scotch History," presented the history of the land from which his forefathers came. In order that no doubt might exist in regard to the authenticity of the statements which he cites in support of his contentions, he has included in his work over 300 fac simile reproductions from old chronicles and from rare manuscripts.

Miss ELLEN GLASGOW has returned to this country from Constantinople. She is at present at Warm Sulphur Springs, Lath County, Va. Her new novel, entitled "The Miller of Old Church," will be published in a few months.

FROM OUT THE PAST

It is more than twenty years since Mr. Curtis edited the correspondence of John Lothrop Motley, and thirty-three years since Mr. Motley died. The volume which his daughter now brings out, "John Lothrop Motley and His Family," (The John Lane Company) contains a number of letters written during the war for the Union. Though passages have been omitted "containing some rather strong expressions of opinion on the subject," enough remains to form a picture of conditions at that time quite unfamiliar to the readers of the present. It is a picture that any of us can study attentively and with profit. Indeed, we are not sure that the editor is well advised in leaving out touches that would have made it still more vivid and impressive. For it is a picture of the past. There are very few, and of a sort safely ignored, who would not understand that, or whose feelings as to the present would be unduly moved by the full truth. And the period portrayed was of such tremendous importance; it remains to this day so complex and difficult of complete comprehension, that light from those deeply engaged in the struggle, men of station and responsibility, cannot be too plentiful.

Motley's part in the public life of the day was not conspicuous, though his service was considerable. When the war broke out, he was known only as the historian of the Dutch Republic, of whom a somewhat restricted number of his countrymen were justly proud, but who, with the exception of a few years as Secretary of the Legation at St. Petersburg, had held no public place. Two vigorous and manly letters to The Times of London, setting forth the Union cause as he understood it, were of great value in enlisting the sympathy, or quickening and strengthening the sympathy, of men like Bright, and Hughes, and Hutton of The Spectator, and Harcourt. This service was in part the cause of his appointment in the late Summer of 1861 to be Minister to Austria, where he remained for the next six years. His immediate duties were onerous but not exacting. His main service undoubtedly was in the presentation he was able to make of the principles and policy of his Government to the diplomatists with whom he was associated and to the numerous men of rank and standing whose respect and admiration he enjoyed in a remarkable degree. For this task he was admirably fitted. He was deeply convinced, to begin with; he was peculiarly gifted socially, forcible, witty, tactful, and personally both winning and imposing. With the aid of his wife and his daughter, who afterward became Lady Harcourt, both women of rare talent and charm, he maintained a social status in the Austrian capital surpassing that of any American Minister then abroad. By correspondence he was in close communication with leading minds in various centres, London, Paris, and particularly Berlin.

In the latter city he had the very precious advantage of intimate friendship with Bismarck, who had been his chum at Göttingen, and who received him again with singular regard and affection. From letters to Bismarck included in the present volume we may take what are, perhaps, the most characteristic expressions of Mr. Motley's feeling at the time. Writing in August, 1862, at one of the darkest moments of the war, Mr. Motley says:

> I shall not go into the subject of our war at all, save to say that it is to me an inconceivable idea that any man of average intellect or love of right can possibly justify this insurrection of the slaveholders. The attempt to destroy a prosperous, powerful and happy commonwealth like ours, merely that on its ruins might be constructed a slave-breeding, slaveholding confederacy, is one of the greatest crimes that history has recorded. In regard to the issue of the war I don't entertain the slightest doubt, if foreign intervention is kept off.

And again to Bismarck in the late Spring of 1864, when the final great effort of the Union forces was just under way:

"You asked me 'if we knew what we were fighting for.' I can't let the question go unanswered. We are fighting to preserve the existence of a magnificent commonwealth and to annihilate the loathsome institution of negro slavery. If men can't fight for such a cause they had better stop fighting forevermore." What influence Mr. Motley had with Bismarck, despite the latter's long resistance, was shown when in August, 1864, the Count "told him he was very glad to know his opinions, [as to the causes of the war and the sole conditions upon which it would terminate] which he accepted and unequivocally adopted and should use as his own when occasion should require."

We hardly think, were Mr. Motley living, he would hold to so extreme a view as to the motives of the Southern people or their leaders. The war was inevitable, so far as human sight can determine. The fate of slavery was involved in it. The Constitution of 1787 provided no arbiter between the Union and States deciding to secede, and the economic and social effects and needs of slavery made secession seem the last resort. But a great part of the Southern people would have refused to take up arms for slavery alone, could that have been made the sole issue. If on the actual confused issues they fought for slavery the best judgment of to-day is not that it was a "crime." And, indeed, it must be remembered that a great part of the Northern people would not have taken up arms against slavery had that been the only issue. Brave, strong, determined and sincere men on both sides fought a long and cruel war, and one of the greatest blessings wrought by it is that they and their descendants may live and prosper together in entire mutual respect.

LITERARY NOTES FROM LONDON

Two Great Works of Reference Expected This Fall—Oxford University's Souvenir to the Roosevelts

LONDON, Aug. 17.—Coming book events cast their gossip before, and some particulars reach me of the new edition of the "Encyclopaedia Britannica" which the "Times" newspaper is to pubish this Winter. You will remember, as we remember here, the great "boom" which the "Times," Mr. Hooper, and Mr. Jackson, made in the ninth edition of the "Encyclopaedia." They took it over on lease, so to say, from the publishing house of Black, who had already sold some 9,000 copies, a number which, in the ordinary course, was thought to have exhausted the market. When the "Times" handled the edition, however, and then issued a series of supplementary volumes, more than 40,000 sets were sold. This was a big achievement, even when one recalls the genius of advertising that was brought to bear on the "Encyclopaedia."

Ever since then a new edition, which will also, in the main, be a wholly new work, has been in preparation at the hands of many learned and expert people. The plan is that it shall be issued right away, this Winter, in twenty-eight volumes, of which fourteen are to be ready in the course of October, and fourteen before Christmas, so that the whole work will be available as a Yuletide gift, if there be people who want to use it for that purpose. It will, of course, be in several bindings at corresponding prices, but the great departure is that there is to be an India paper edition, as well as one on ordinary paper. Seldom, if ever, has a great work of reference been issued on India paper, and it will be interesting to see the result of the experiment.

The effect of it will be to compress the work into half the shelf-room that the usual edition would need, and to people who live in flats or not very big houses this will be a matter of importance. The India paper form may, indeed, discover a new public altogether, and, in any case, it is said that the "Times" people expect to sell at least as many sets of this tenth edition of the "Encyclopaedia" as were sold of the ninth edition, namely 50,000. As an element toward this they propose to allow owners of the ninth edition a substantial sum for their copies, on these being returned and copies of the tenth edition purchased. In other words, if you desire to buy the new, up-to-date work and return the old one an allowance will be made to you on the purchase price. No doubt enterprising provision will also be made for the sale of the "Encyclopaedia" in America, but as to that the book gossip of London does not yet tell us anything.

Some interesting points for the information of American readers come to me in regard to another great English reference book, the "New Oxford Dictionary." Writing about it the other week, I happened to say that the cost of producing it would certainly not be less than the fortune which George Smith spent on the "National Dictionary of Biography." It will, however, as a matter of fact, be a great deal more; not less, probably, than £250,000. That, I am told, is what the "Oxford Dictionary" will have cost by the time it is completed, an event now within reasonable sight, for great progress has been made with the undertaking in recent years.

It was originally suggested and promoted by the Philological Society, but soon the fact emerged that a far larger organization was needed to carry it to issue. Accordingly, in a fine spirit of scholarship, it was taken up by the Oxford University Press, which is thus rendering to learning and literature a service that otherwise could not have been carried through. The late Dr. Furnival was one of the originators of the "Dictionary." The principal editor, of course, has been Sir James Murray, whose knighthood has come to him in recognition of this labor. Besides Dr. Bradley, another of the editors, he has had Dr. Craigie associated with him, and it is the division of labor which has enabled the "Oxford Dictionary" to make such good progress.

When Col. Roosevelt, during his stay here, visited Oxford University, he naturally heard about the great "Dictionary," as he heard about other things. The Oxford University Press publishes a little monthly called "The Periodical," and in the new number of this I find a reproduction of a keepsake which was presented to the Colonel. The printing of these Oxford keepsakes and the giving of them to distinguished callers is an old custom, dating back into the seventeenth century. That presented to Col. Roosevelt is a beautiful bit of printing with the university arms and motto, "Dominus Illuminatio Mea" for chief decoration. "On Tuesday, June 7th, 1910," the text reads, "Mr. and Mrs. Roosevelt and party visited University Press, Oxford, and the printing and binding of this keepsake, produced according to ancient custom, was finally completed for presentation during their progress through the works." One judges that Col. Roosevelt will give that little Oxford booklet a place of honor among his literary treasures, just as Mrs. Roosevelt will treasure a printed silk keepsake which she received at the same time; a keepsake, I may add, similar to that presented to Queen Victoria when she visited Oxford University.

Dr. BERNARD HOLLANDER, author of "Hypnotism and Suggestion," is a psychologist of distinction and a physician for mental disorders and diseases. He is well known for his original investigations into the functions of the brain and their relations to mind and character.

Mr. FREDERICK TOWNSEND MARTIN has just finished and delivered to his publishers the manuscript of his book, "The Reminiscences of My Life." Mr. Martin's recollections cover a most interesting period of American society. The book closes with a description of the fancy ball given by his brother, Mr. Bradley Martin, in 1898. Before it is published in book form, it will appear serially.

Mr. A. H. CHAYTOR, the author of "Letters to a Salmon-Fisher's Sons," has moved from the North of Britain to Sussex, where they land invaders, not "fush," and he may have few opportunities to teach his sons to profit by his book.

Mr. WARRINGTON DAWSON, author of "The Scar," although hard at work on a new novel, takes daily relaxation in the cheerful form of entertaining Mr. Kermit Roosevelt at his home in Versailles, whence the two sally forth, seeing Paris without a megaphone. A veteran journalist makes the best of city guides, and when he returns the young man will probably be prepared to tell his father all about the fauna and flora of Paris, and to defend himself if accused of human nature faking.

Miss VINETA SEIBERT, who wrote "The Gossamer Thread," has been elected a member of the Louisville Authors' Club, which includes so many novelists whose work appears in New York and Boston.

Professor GEORGE LYMAN KITTREDGE of Harvard has lately been elected one of the twenty-seven Corresponding Fellows of the British Academy, an honor which has come to few Americans. As one of the editors of "English and Scottish Popular Ballads" from the collection of the late Professor Child, and as a Shakspere student and teacher he is well known, and he is also one of the editors of those perpetual "good sellers," the Allen and Greenough Latin Series.

Mr. DOUGLAS SLADEN and Mr. Wigmore have set their hands to editing "The Green Book," which contains some 248 pages of the names of persons bearing titles, and also small classified lists. Eighteen Americans are wives and four widows of peers. Lists of eminent preachers, Anglican and Catholic, of artists, authors, scientific men and sportsmen, form part of the volume which records the recent changes in the royal family, the court, and the peerage almost actually up to date.

Dr. JAMES C. EGBERT has found this a very busy Summer. The manifold duties which have fallen to his lot as Director of the Summer School of Columbia University have been greatly augmented by the work in connection with two volumes to be published this fall in a Latin Classics Series, of which he is the general editor. The volumes are Tacitus's Histories, Books I. and II., edited by Professor Frank G. Moore, and Cicero's Letters, selected and edited by Dr. Ernst Riess. Besides this Professor Egbert is endeavoring to get into shape a volume of his own for inclusion in this series.

MR. CHARLES BATTELL LOOMIS has received a letter from the nuns in the convent of Our Lady of Mercy, Skibbereen, County Cork, asking him for a copy of his "Just Irish" for their library.

HORACE TRAUBEL is spending part of his Summer vacation in Montreal pruning and revising the manuscript for his volume of poems which will appear under the title of "Optimos" this fall.

EARL BARNES, author of "Where Knowledge Fails," has just returned from a long visit to Italy and is at Nantucket preparing for his fall lecture season.

WILL IRWIN is at Scituate, Mass., making the final revisions in his new novel, "The Readjustment," which will be published in the fall. His "The City That Was" is a steady seller on the Pacific coast.

"CHANTECLER" IN ENGLISH DRESS

Miss Hall's Authorized Version of Rostand's Famous Drama a Faithful Rendition of the Original

By WALTER LITTLEFIELD.

ALTHOUGH insisted on by the literary critic, the fact is not generally appreciated that translation is a department of literature quite as worthy of particular consideration as original expression in prose or verse. The art of the best translators is as elusive and varied as that of the most enduring of literary creators—more imaginative, more rhetorically resourceful than the art of the poet—and these superlative qualities must of necessity be possessed in bi-lingual form and thought.

Indeed, so exacting are the requirements of a translator that, although hundreds may give popular satisfaction as mere interpreters, not one in a thousand satisfies the critical exigencies of the art. Henry James, who is as fluent in French as he is in English, as simple in the former language as he is prolix in the latter, once translated Alphonse Daudet's "Porte Tarascon" and produced a stately piece of prose, in which Gallic wit was conspicuous by its absence. Richard Le Gallienne, with absolutely no knowledge of Persian, but with a true poet's gifts, produced a masterpiece out of the numerous translations of the "Rubáiyát," which critics proficient in the original proclaim nearer the quatrains of old Omar than the FitzGerald version. The hurried translation of Victor Hugo's "Les Misérables," dictated in the feverish nights of the Summer of 1862 by Charles E. Wilbour, contains more of the spirit of the original than any of the later renderings by bi-lingual experts.

Academically the ideal of the translator is to reproduce the same effect on the alien that the original does on the native mind. Cary's translation of Dante's "Commedia" does this to a measurable degree, and yet the rhythm of the "terza rima" is certainly lacking in his measured periods of blank verse. Not even Byron could make the "terza rima" sing harmoniously to English ears. To a certain extent—bearing in mind both form and subject—what the "terza rima" meant to the Tuscan of the "trecento," Biblical English means to the modern popular mind. Thus, persons who know not the meaning of poetry and even deny its mission find a certain satisfaction in reading Charles Eliot Norton's prose interpretation of Dante which Cary's admirable verse could not possibly give.

And this brings us to a consideration of the authorized American translation of Edmond Rostand's "Chantecler."* Save for the lyrics, it is a prose translation. A first glance at this prose will doubtless bring disappointment to persons who are able—or who imagine they are able—to enjoy the original in all its charm of poetry, symbolical suggestion, and verbal gymnastics. A little thought, however, should convince them that the rendering of "Chantecler" into English verse is neither desirable nor possible. It is not desirable because a poetic version could not possibly appeal to so large a public as a prose version. It is not possible because the bi-lingual poet has not been born who can rhythmically reproduce the turns, twistings, shades, and touches of Rostand's Gallic wit—often slangy, often archaic, but always lyrical.

Doubtless these considerations inspired Miss Gertrude Hall to produce the translation that she has. Her temptation to put the whole play into verse must have been strong, for her poetical rendering of Rostand's other play, "Cyrano de Bergerac," revealed her not only an able translator but a poet of infinite charm and varied imagination. That she overcame this temptation is a credit to her good sense. She wished to make "Chantecler" accessible to the largest number of English readers and to convey to them Rostand's message in the simplest manner possible. As for those who yearn for a versified imitation of Rostand's poetry, their imagination may palliate their displeasure if it does not succeed in bringing them still nearer the original. Neither author nor translator can furnish knowledge or taste for sympathetic appreciation.

Everybody is pretty well acquainted with the circumstances in which, seven years ago, Rostand conceived "Chantecler," while one morning meditating in the hen yard of his Cambo villa. From this initial conception the step to transferring a barnyard tragedy to common life was abstractly simple yet concretely difficult. The feathered and furred human beings who spoke his alexandrines must be laughed with and not at. In other words, the illusion must be complete.

As to the play that is to be read, such an illusion is not necessary—less in a translation than in the original. Here we have the same Hellenic Fate which mastered the heroes in both "Cyrano" and "L'Aiglon" overcoming the generous but deluded Sultan of the barnyard.

Chantecler believes that his clarion notes cause the sun to rise and awake all Nature to welcome in another day. The denizens of the barnyard, while not knowing the secret of his song, readily grant him all the privileges of a dominant, masterful, yet ever gracious and gentle personality. Naturally, he has conspiring enemies, such as the pseudo-philosophic Blackbird and the treacherous Cat, as well as faithful friends, like Patou, the watch-dog.

Into this barnyard world comes a Hen Pheasant, driven thither by a hunter's dog. She coquets with Chantecler and he, male-like, tries to make an impression by relating the advantages of his estate, demonstrating his powers, and vaguely hinting at the secret of his song. When darkness falls the nightbirds gather. They would rid themselves of Chantecler so as to have perpetual night. The next day there is to be a reception at the Guinea Hen's, where they have contrived to present an American Game Cock who will challenge and destroy Chantecler. The conspiracy comes to naught, and the Game Cock limps away, wounded by one of his own spurs. The combat, however, has opened the eyes of Chantecler to the petty hatreds, spite, and jealousy which surround him in the barnyard, and so freely expressed when it was believed that his end was near. So he goes off to the forest with the Hen Pheasant.

He has already told her the secret of his song and how he is the medium through which Nature proclaims its desire for another day, but here in the forest he forgets to crow, and the rising sun reveals him an impostor—of which revelation she is not slow to take advantage. That decides him. He will return to the barnyard and take up again his former duties, for although he now realizes that the sun comes up without his aid, yet there may be some poor animals who, missing his morning song, would not know that day had come. As he makes his way through the forest a sportsman aims at him. At this crisis the Hen Pheasant, now all love and forgiveness, flies to distract the hunter's aim, and is caught in a poacher's net. Chantecler escapes and goes back to his barnyard duties.

Just as in the character of Cyrano we have the embodiment of all human genius rendered nought by a pathetic, unnatural, and fatal self-effacement, so in that of Chantecler we have a paragon of human virtue whose struggles toward perfection are rendered nought by a simple childish delusion. By making the scene of this delusion the barnyard and forest, and its victims domestic fowl and wild birds and beasts, M. Rostand has been able to manipulate the fetich of Fate as ironically as he pleased and with a much more convincing illusion than did Aristophanes.

The dialogue by which the story is related and its human application imparted is written in alexandrines that bristle with figures of speech and puns, to comprehend all of which one must not only be a Frenchman but a boulevardier and historian, an etymologist and a consummate naturalist rolled into one. What, therefore, is but vaguely understood or appreciated by the average Parisian is hardly worth while adorning in English garb, particularly as neither the story nor the symbolism of the play depends upon these "tropes" to any perceptible extent. They are merely the linguistic and rhetorical caprices of a great poet, who dares to have his little jokes with the sublime art of which he is master.

In many cases Miss Hall has been obliged to paraphrase in order to show the meaning, where an attempt to find the corresponding pun would have been ridiculous. For example, the Pigeon, in speaking of Chantecler's crow, says:

> To sing so well we imagine he must have a secret—a secret that renders his voice so red that at his cock-a-doodle-do (cocorico) the field poppy (coquelicot) starts as if he heard himself called by name!

It is construed by Miss Hall:

> —true that, as report says, he has a secret for his amazing singing, a secret whereby his crow becomes a brilliant burst of red which makes the poppies of the field feel themselves contemptible imitations?"

Of course the pun is lost, but the meaning is prettily emphasized. There are examples also where the translator has given a literal rendering of a word and then adjusted an English significance to it. The butterfly Mars is literally translated Admiral. He is called Mars "because he comes in July." He is called Admiral "because he is neither a seaman nor a soldier."

> The Turkey—She is just a good old-fashioned Gascon hen, born in the neighborhood of Pau.
>
> The Blackbird—She is the one Henry IV. wished to see cooking in every Frenchman's pot!

In French "Pau" and "pot," of course, rhyme, but the historical jest is, nevertheless, sufficiently preserved for those who can appreciate it.

These examples and a hundred others like them show the excellent judgment that Miss Hall has revealed in subordinating a play upon words to the interpretation of the thought whether obvious or underlying. In the great scenes where the attention would be distracted—just as it was at the Porte-Saint-Martin theatre—by figures of speech, Miss Hall improves on Rostand to the extent of keeping his main theme before the reader. Three examples will be sufficient to show this.

In his revelation of his supposed secret, Chantecler declaims to the Hen Pheasant:

> I never start to sing until my eight claws, after clearing a space of weeds and stones, have found the soft, dark turf underneath. Then, placed in direct contact with the good earth, I sing! * * * I become the mouthpiece, in some sort official, through which the cry of the earth escapes toward the sky!

Chantecler, advancing to meet the Game Cock, gently puts aside a little chick that has got in the way, with "Run to your mother, tot!" and then continues his remarks to the Cock, "that you look like a fool who has mislaid his coxcomb!"

> The Game Cock, (emphatically)—In America, during my grand tour, I killed three Claybornes in a day. I have killed two Sherwoods, three Smoks, and one Sumatra. I have killed —let me advise any one fighting me to take something beforehand to keep down his pulse!—three Redgame at Cambridge and ten Braekels at Bruges!
>
> Chantecler, (very simply)—I, my dear Sir, have never killed anything. But as I have at different times succored, defended, and protected this one and that I might perhaps be called, in my own fashion, brave.

Deep in the forest Chantecler hears the Nightingale sing, and at last realizes the inadequacy of his own music; but the Nightingale humbles herself and says:

> You fought for a friend of mine, the Rose. Learn, comrade, this sorrowful and reassuring fact that no one, Cock of the Morning or Evening Nightingale has quite the song of his dream.
>
> "I awaken nobody," says the Nightingale. "What matter? One must sing on! Sing on, even while knowing there are songs which he prefers to his own song." And when a fowler's gun lays the Nightingale low Chantecler bends over his body and utters the words: "Peace, little poet!"

As to the lyrics, Chantecler's Ode to the Sun, the Nightbirds' Ode, and the song of the Nightingale are all faithfully rendered. Chantecler proclaims to the sun:

I sing of thee, and will be thy high priest,
Who disdainest not to glass thy shining face
In the humble basin of blue suds,
Or see the lightning of thy last farewell
Reflected in an humble cottage pane.

The Nightbirds' Ode begins:

Praise the Night, discreet, propitious,
When with wadded wing and muted
  O'er the sleeping world we fly,
And the partridge in the bracken
Ne'er suspects the hovering presence
  Till we pounce without a cry.

And the Nightingale's song, of which the last two lines are rendered by the Toads, ends:

Life, Death, I turn to rhapsody,
Who am the deathless Philomel!
——The Toads, croak! croak! the Toads are we,
Who welter in malignity!

Something might also be said in praise of Miss Hall's rendering of the witty dialogue at the Guinea Hen's reception—the reception being a typical Parisian 5 o'clock, where celebrities of the artistic, literary, political, and social world pass in dress parade and are wittily satirized by the poet. But one must be conversant with a whole library of French literature in order to grasp all the vagaries of its meaning even in French. The conversation here between Chantecler and the Blackbird, the pseudo-philosopher, has no less than nine literary references in almost as many lines.

In a word, Miss Hall has attempted to perform neither what is unnecessary nor what is impossible. Into simple English prose she has translated the dialogue of Rostand's play so as to make the story, the human analogies, and much of the symbolism perfectly apparent if not inviting to English readers. She has rendered the lyrics into verse that literally and poetically reproduce the meaning and suggestion of the originals. More than this should not be expected in the circumstances. Those who know French, of course, need go no further than the original. Those who do not, but who yearn for a complete poetical transference of Rostand's thought into English verse are very likely to die unsatisfied.

The Italians have a phrase which is peculiarly applicable to the poetry of Rostand—"traduttore traditore"—to translate is to betray. Miss Hall has not betrayed Rostand as either poet or dramatist, although she may have ignored him as a word juggler.

FINLAND AS THE TOURIST SEES IT

Quaint Towns and Picturesque Scenes in a Land Described as a Paradise for Travellers

MR. HARRY DE WINDT'S book of travels in Finland* will be useful no doubt to tourists as it contains a quantity of general information, a glossary, a list of physicians, hotels, trains, &c., and various items useful to the casual visitor and traveller in a strange land. It is a book of no particular style, which is not surprising, perhaps, since Mr. De Windt remarks in his preface that it was prepared at the suggestion of an English bookseller in St. Petersburg, and has been compiled from crude and scattered notes. Mr. De Windt having no particular purpose in his visit to Finland other than that of the conventional tourist outlines a trip which, as he says, may be accomplished by the most delicate invalid of either sex, as one of the greatest charms of Finland lies in the fact that its wildest districts may be explored in comfort if not in actual luxury.

Viborg, this traveller found the least imposing of all the Finnish towns, for many of its dwellings are built of wood. But cleanliness prevails, and there is picturesqueness as well in the market-place lying in the shadow of the quaint old gabled houses, "where the rosy-cheeked peasants, carts and cobbles, and canvas-booths packed with fruit and vegetables recall some old-world town in far away Brittany."

Mr. De Windt tells of his meeting with a jolly old professor in Viborg who made the following observation: "Our map," he said, "shows our politics. You see, she snaps her fingers at Sweden and kicks Russia in the eye." And the traveller comments on the coincidence of the configuration, which, he urges, is, indeed, remarkable.

The author does not find that the Finns make fine soldiers, as they have a slouching, slovenly appearance on parade. But he admits that they fought like fiends before Plevna, and quotes a Britisher, who credits them with being the finest sailors in the world.

Recalling Dr. Johnson's remark that "the finest landscape in the world is nothing without a good inn in the foreground," the author is able to commend Imatra both pictorially and gastronomically. The restaurant overlooking the falls is excellent and patronized by smart people. The neighborhood, too, provides good fishing, and for trout Imatra is unsurpassed.

Something about Finnish hours may be interesting. Early coffee, for instance, is at 8 o'clock, lunch at 10, dinner at 4, and supper at 9. Evidently the Finlanders believe in treating "Little Mary" liberally and well. Moreover, according to this traveller, the Finns are kind and considerate to strangers, hospitable and generally fair in their dealings. And from his account the country must be a paradise for cyclists.

> The first thing that strikes the stranger in Tammerfors, he says, is the amazing number of bicycles. In Helsingfors almost every fourth inhabitant cycles, but here the percentage must be even greater. When the automobile craze reaches here I shudder to think of the results. In the meantime everybody uses the wheel—men, women, and children, even babes who should be in arms instead of mounted on a bicycle.

Nearing Vasa on one occasion at night the traveller found a crowd assembled in a field by the roadside, where a canvas booth flashed dimly in the lurid glare of kerosene torches. Hard by, in a rope-enclosed space, some oddly garbed figures were dancing to the strains of wind instruments. There were perhaps a dozen of them in scarlet rusty velvet and high boots, while the women were of Eastern type, olive-skinned and almond-eyed, and wearing gaudy silks adorned with strange coins and barbaric golden ornaments. "Moustaläinen" was the not very intelligible description vouchsafed by a bystander. Subsequently, from one of the band, Mr. De Windt learned that they were Gypsies, who had taken two years to travel from the banks of the Danube by way of Austria and Russia to Finland.

The book is liberally interspersed with human data of this sort, picturesquely presented, and a series of half-tone plates adds interest to it.

FIONA MACLEOD

THE FOURTH AND FIFTH volumes of the uniform edition of "The Writings of Fiona Macleod" (Duffield & Co., $1.50 each) have been added to the three preceding issues. Two more volumes are yet to come. Of the two now at hand one contains "The Divine Adventure," "Iona," and "Studies in Spiritual History." There are also some fragments from "Green Fire," which was published as "a romance" some fourteen years ago, but which the author thought had such grave defects of design and construction that he decided it should not be republished. These fragments are placed beside "The Herdsman," a somewhat altered version of "Green Fire" which William Sharp declared was the only part of that book which he wished to preserve. Mrs. William Sharp, editor of the collected works, closes the volume with a bibliographical note concerning several of the sketches and essays. The other of the two present volumes contains "The Winged Destiny" and "Studies in the Spiritual History of the Gael." Each volume contains as a frontispiece an illustration of Hebridean scenery.

STUDIES IN PHYSIOLOGY

DR. ZENNER'S "Education in Sexual Physiology and Hygiene," (Robert Clarke Co., Cincinnati, $1,) is a message from the physician to the people, particularly to young people, whose education in matters which most concern their bodily health and happiness has been so sadly neglected in the past. Most social diseases, and many of a nervous and mental origin are due, in the last analysis to ignorance of the elementary principles of body economy. When children are taught that the purpose of differentiation of sex is to reproduce the individual and perpetuate the race, much of the embarrassment, secrecy and mystery of the matter will disappear from their minds.

Dr. Zenner's book is based on talks given before classes of school children and college students during the past few months. He found that by going back to the biological significance of the reproduction of the amoeba, insects, fish, and plants, it was possible to interest young people in the strictly scientific aspects of the subject so that when the time was ripe for drawing deductions for the guidance of human conduct, the way was well paved. The serious interest which his hearers displayed proved to him that he had effected his original purpose. This book is written simply, guardedly, and in a straightforward manner and can safely be put into the hands of all children who are capable of reasoning things out for themselves. It should prove a great help to parents and teachers in understanding and describing these matters which are so essential for proper moral conduct.

A TANTALIZED READER

"TANTALUS," by Mary Forward Kimmell (The C. M. Clark Publishing Co.) is a fluently written story, which may best be described as an orgy of words, and at such an orgy filling 534 closely printed pages, it is rather wearisome to assist. No matter what topic of conversation is introduced in the tale every one concerned seems to beat about the bush as long as possible before coming to the point; while as to the explanation of the unaccountableness of the principal character, "Tantalus" is a synonym for the gentle reader long before it is reached. Dr. Victor Paul, the mysterious hero, has "done something" in a veiled past, and what that something is, with its dire results, is the central theme of the novel, which is furnished with a subordinate hero, and with its due amount of romance. Did not some one once say to "the Coryphaeus of English letters," "I cannot criticise ——'s book, because, I confess, I cannot read it," and did not the Coryphaeus reply: "Sir, do you not perceive that is in itself a criticism?" Verbum sap.

AT THE WHITE CAT

MARY ROBERTS RINEHART'S new novel, "The Window at the White Cat" (The Bobbs-Merrill Co.), shows many signs of having been written in haste, perhaps to be revised at leisure, a leisure which never came. It does not equal this author's previous stories in either ingenuity of construction or vivacity and humor of relation, while it falls far below the cleverness of her last book, "When a Man Marries." It is told in the first person, by a lawyer verging toward middle age, to whom, in the first chapter, enters a young woman who wants advice about her father, a politician and State official of bad odor who has suddenly sunk out of sight. The lawyer falls in love at once and endeavors to play detective.

But "The Window at the White Cat" is not a detective story. Instead of the usual detective cleverness, Mrs. Rinehart's lawyer and his assistants boggle things in rather a clumsy way and it takes ten full days for events to run themselves down. This they finally do, without too much help from the chief characters, and then a long explanation is required to tell how it all happened. The method is not a skillful one, and it smacks strongly of the novice in fiction. The important events, upon which the story hangs, are not made plausible, while the characters are not much more than pieces of machinery for the carrying on of the story. The "White Cat" of the title is a political club through one of whose windows the chief malefactor of the tale meets his death.

"THE SCIENCE OF ADVERTISING"

A LITTLE VOLUME of sixty odd pages on "The Science of Advertising" (Duffield & Co.), by Edwin Balmer, has in it enough meat to make it almost as interesting to the general reader who thinks about social and economic progress as to the manufacturer or dealer whose business it touches directly. It is a philosophic discussion, clearly reasoned, and presented with simplicity and directness, of the place which advertising holds not only in our own National growth but in the general advance of democracy, as illustrated in this country. In its economic and social action, advertising is a powerful force, the author argues, constantly working to raise the standard of life and, in order that our purchasing power may keep up with that gradually rising standard, to increase our pecuniary effiency:

> The advertisers of soap and collars keep after us for cleanliness and neatness; the advertisers of filters have perforce to make us hold higher regard for our health; and the advertisers of plumbing requisites, our sanitation. The advertisers of such advanced things as automobiles and pianos are after us, much more continually and effectively than the sociologists, to raise our standard of living and cause us to make the greater effort toward personal efficiency.

The author calls effective advertising, with its appeal straight to the consumer, the "direct primary" of business methods and holds that its ultimate effect is to raise the standard of products as well as the standard of living.

ART OF STORY TELLING

MR. RICHARD THOMAS WYCHE, author of "Some Great Stories and How to Tell Them" (Newson & Co.), looks upon story-telling as a very good method of affording pleasure and of imparting information to the young. Writing as an expert, he offers a number of valuable suggestions to those who desire to become proficient as story-tellers and exemplifies his teachings by telling a number of stories in the manner in which he thinks they should be told. His book will be useful to teachers and parents and others who have to do with the education of children.

Holland, and others. The cover is in gray boards, with lettering and decoration in gold and black and bears a medallion of a child's head.

VIEWS OF READERS

An Expurgated Scott

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

Concerning the "Expurgated Scott," it seems to me that Mr. Herbert P. Williams has been unfortunate in the children he has known. My own observation of the attitude of the modern young person toward Scott's novels is just the opposite of his. The I-know-a-man argument is never of much consequence, since it proves no more than a single case. But against Mr. Williams's specific instance I may at least match another of a boy in his early teens, just an average, wholesome sort of lad, who has read "Ivanhoe," or had it read to him, three times, without any skipping, and himself helping to look up the meaning of the foreign words—which was much better for him than to have had them translated for his benefit. He and his young friends have read "Ivanhoe," "Quentin Durward," and several other of Scott's novels with the keenest interest and they coincide in the opinion that "they're great."

Of more consequence as proof that the modern child does read Scott with pleasure is the fact that in one large school known to me, "Ivanhoe" is one of the first books that the children read in their study of English literature. Every year a class of boys and girls in their first teens, numbering twenty or more, read that novel through, without skipping a page, and I have not yet heard of one who found it boresome. It seems to me, if a child does not like a book it is better to put it aside and let him wait for the reading of it until he has grown up to it—much better than to trim it down and spice it up and sugarcoat it until it has been made toothsome to his immature mental palate.

Have the authors themselves no rights in the matter? What sort of right has any one to butcher the books of a master who is dead and gone, just to make a children's holiday? Considered on its moral side it would be just as defensible for a modern artist to paint an impressionist background into a Rembrandt portrait as for a present-day writer to attempt to make over the books of a dead author into the form in which he imagines that author would cast them if he were writing them now. It is Scott's crowning charm that his novels are not written in the style of to-day. If there are children who cannot appreciate his work let them wait to read him until they can.

Children nowadays have too many books pelted at them, anyway. They are stuffed with reading, until their little brains are like to get glazed over with other people's thoughts so thickly that they will never have any of their own. They do not in the least need a maimed Scott or a perverted Plutarch or an expurgated and perfumed "Gulliver's Travels." For their own sakes do let us leave them some of the masterpieces to read when they shall have grown to an age mature enough to appreciate them without spicing and sugar-coating.

Mrs. Munn's "Will Shakespeare"

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

I have recently read with great interest Margaret Crosby Munn's drama "Will Shakespeare of Stratford and London." I was struck by its poetic beauty and the clearness and directness with which the characters were portrayed and the story told. It interested me also as giving me the first vital impression of Shakespeare as a living man that I had ever received. With what I suppose to be an average knowledge of the life of Shakespeare and the history of the time, the historical background of the play seemed to me to be accurate. With a profound admiration for Dr. Rolfe's Shakesperean research and work, I was much surprised in reading his review of Mrs. Munn's play in the SATURDAY TIMES of July 16 to see that not only had its significance from a poetic and literary standpoint escaped him entirely, but also that he called it a confused medley and asserted that almost all the historical portions of the play were inaccurate. I have taken the trouble to refresh my memory on the points that Dr. Rolfe most severely criticised, and find that Mrs. Munn had ample authority for all the facts Dr. Rolfe contradicts, although her commentators differ in their conclusions from Dr. Rolfe.

In the opening of his review Dr. Rolfe asserts that the poaching episode with which the play opens could not have been later than 1580. Sidney Lee says that it must have been in 1585. Other commentators, assuming it to be traditional, give it no definite date. Mrs. Munn was therefore justified in fixing it at a time between these two dates for the purposes of her story. He objects to Mrs. Munn's making Sandells and Richardson oppose Anne Hathaway's marriage to Shakespeare and afterward urge it to stop scandal; but again there is no reason why there should not have been an opposition on her mother's part on account of the difference in their ages and Shakespeare's roving qualities, to be afterward overcome by Anne's passion for him and the fear of scandal.

Dr. Rolfe asserts that it is impossible for Southampton to have appeared as he does in the play, as a boy of 9 or 10 in Charlcote Wood. As a matter of fact nothing could have been more possible or probable. Southampton became the ward of the court on the death of his father when he was 8 years old in 1581. He was the ward of Lord Burleigh, who was a contemporary of Leicester, and parties of guests were not infrequent at Kenilworth. In 1575 Queen Elizabeth was entertained there, and it is therefore well within the range of possibility that in 1582 Lord Burleigh might have brought his ward, Southampton, with him to Kenilworth on one of these occasions. Dr. Rolfe says that Mrs. Munn makes Shakespeare fall desperately in love with Elisabeth Vernon when a girl of 11 or 12, but this is a strangely superficial reading. Shakespeare has parted from his home and his children at the close of a rupture between himself and his wife. He feels that in complete separation lies the only hope for the future. Of Elisabeth Vernon and Southampton he says:

> Such beings as that radiant girl and boy
> Reveal myself to me. I may not think
> Upon my darlings left behind. 'Tis ruin.
> But I still love, and evermore must love.
> Love makes a mighty music in my heart
> And must find noble hearts to answer it,
> A world on which to lavish all its wealth.

We find no hint, as Dr. Rolfe says, of an absurd love on the part of Shakespeare for a child, but instead the drawing of a sorely wounded heart toward anything of human loveliness that could fill the blank left by his necessary separation from his children. Again Dr. Rolfe says that to have Southampton at his country place at Titchfield in May, 1586, was impossible, as he was then at Oxford; but why is it impossible that a young nobleman should leave Oxford during the last quarter for a few days' holiday in his home with his young friends?

Dr. Rolfe comments on the curious tangle of the relations of Southampton and Bridget Manners and Shakespeare and Elisabeth Vernon. He later declares that it is impossible that Elisabeth Vernon could have been the dark lady of the Sonnets, but here again Mrs. Munn has authority for her belief. It was held by Mrs. Jameson, (whose deductions may be questioned,) and the same theory has been elaborated at great length by Gerald Massey. We learn from the Sonnets that Southampton and Shakespeare loved the same woman; a woman, whom Shakespeare felt to be of station above his, of imprudent and light character, yet with power to sway two men, each remarkable in his own way. Granting that Elisabeth Vernon might have been Shakespeare's dark lady, the tangle which Dr. Rolfe finds so absurd is borne out absolutely by history. Southampton first courted Bridget Manners, and was refused by her in the actual words she speaks in Mrs. Munn's play. Later a scandal arose about Southampton and Elisabeth Vernon which culminated in his returning from the Embassy to Paris, where he had gone with Lord Cecil, and marrying Elisabeth Vernon. These events occurred from 1598 to 1599, the time at which Mrs. Munn places those which occur in her play.

Dr. Rolfe declares that the episode of the dark lady must have been over long before 1598, but if she were Elisabeth Vernon, it must have continued until 1599 at the time when she married Southampton. Even though Shakespeare bought New Place in 1597, he did not actually go back to Stratford to live until many years later, so that all the principal events in Mrs. Munn's play could actually have happened, as her note says at the end of the play.

In the British Museum is a little book whose title I cannot now recall, of private Latin letters with English translations, from one of Queen Elizabeth's courtiers to a friend. Mrs. Munn must have carefully read this litle volume, for many intimate characteristics of personages in her play are to be found only in these letters.

It can be seen from this little résumé that, in a work which Mrs. Munn says in her Apologia is one of Imagination, it would scarcely be possible to keep more closely to the facts than she has done. I have not attempted to make any critical review of a work which has been praised by some of the foremost critics of this country, but have only purposed to do justice to the points which Dr. Rolfe so severely condemns.

Mr. Roosevelt's Style

New York Times Saturday Review of Books:

Will you allow me to say a word in answer to "Ignota" in a recent issue of THE REVIEW in re the style of Roosevelt? "Ignota" writes that "she does object to any attempt to rank commonplace thought with thought whose vital value gives it innate distinction."

This in its antithesis so explains the substance of the Roosevelt "style" as to make it notable, for if he has style at all, it is because he has taken the "commonplace thought," the "vital value" which many of us do not gainsay, and the very use of which has given it that "innate distinction" here desired. And why? Because these commonplace thoughts have too long been ignored. The feeling that "no amount of vehemence and vociferation can transform a series of platitudes into a piece of classic prose" while true in itself, exposes the underlying thought of "Ignota's" letter, and to my mind, discredits it, despite her disclaimer. Mr. Roosevelt's life and letters, so far as I have observed, have been a protest against those evils in our public and private life, the very continuance of which has brought about some present deplorable conditions, the amelioration of which will only come by just that vehemence and vociferation in denunciation of those who are responsible, and the insistence of the use of those platitudes now accepted as the only true guides to right living. Need I say the Golden Rule comes first? I need mention no other. But neither the fact that they are platitudes or commonplaces will divest them of that "vital value" which "Ignota" says they lack.

I have no wish to combat other erroneous views in "Ignota's" letter further than to say "that a birch tree" cannot "produce maple sap or turn itself into an elm or sesquoia." But, given a Roosevelt, a good Dutch ancestry, a college training, a splendid backbone, some money, more morals, and a good wife, if he hadn't by "taking thought" turned himself into a State Representative, Police Commissioner, Governor, Vice President, and then President it wouldn't have been because of his "style," but in spite of it.

THIS is the most powerful presentation of the social problem in a great city that has appeared in print. In addition it is a gripping story, moving, dramatic, elemental. The author has contrasted the fine, pure story of Herman and Katie with poor Mary's tragic fate in a striking manner. His characters live, because they are drawn from real life—the life of this great city, the life of to-day. This story is vital and pregnant with meaning for every man and woman who lives in the world.

LITERARY NOTES FROM BOSTON

Some Entertaining Books of Travel—President Tucker on Modern Society and the Church—Fall Fiction.

BOSTON, Aug. 26.—If one may believe the novelists, from Thackeray and Charles Reade to Mr. Kipling, Mr. Roosevelt's recommendation of Eliza Calvert Hall's "Sally Ann's Experience" for use as a tract in all families in which the men tend to selfish or thoughtless disregard of the rights of their womenkind, will bring it before at least half of the readers of the English language, and if one add thereto the men whose womenkind accuse them of the fault, there is certainly good reason for Little, Brown & Co.'s issue of the tale in a form suitable for a gift book, but inexpensive. Bound in boards with a picture in color on its cover, a frontispiece by Mr. G. Patrick Nelson, and decorated borders by Mr. T. B. Hapgood, it may be trusted to recommend itself to any man who reads fiction, and that, according to these same satirists, means all clever and healthy-minded men.

The author of "The Quests of Paul Beck," recently announced by this firm, is the Judge of County Court of Clare, Matthias McDonnell, K. C., an Irishman, sixty years of age, a graduate of the Catholic University, and a double gold medallist of the law students' debating society. For three years he was the Nationalist member for Roscommon, but for the last fifteen years his legal duties and his literary work, with a liberal admixture of golf, cricket, cycling, tennis, and swimming, have diverted him from politics. His detective is no imitator of Sherlock Holmes, but has other methods.

A new book by Mr. George Wharton James is announced for issue on the same day as these lighter works. Its title, "The Grand Canyon of Arizona: How to See It," somewhat underrates it, for, although a complete guide-book, enabling the reader to plan his visit in every detail, describing the various excursions, and the best ways to make them, it also includes sufficient scientific knowledge to make him independent of formal textbooks, besides forty-eight pages of good photographs, and the government maps.

Illustrated editions of Mrs. Anna Bowman Dodd's "Three Normandy Inns" and "Falaise, the Town of the Conqueror," are due to come next month. Twenty-four photographs by Demacher will be included in the former, and the latter is to have sixteen full-page illustrations. Dr. Samuel Adams Drake's "New England Legends and Folklore in Prose and Poetry" is also to be illustrated in holiday fashion, partly with full-page plates, partly with text illustrations.

"Letters to My Son," the anonymous work published by Houghton Mifflin Co., is to be translated into French, if the author be willing, an application having been received from France, and forwarded to her.

President Tucker's coming book, "The Function of the Church in Modern Society," although sure to be fair and dispassionate, is expected to include comment on many matters on which there is wide difference of opinion, such as the oddly misunderstood "Emmanuel Movement," and the older topic of the duty of the church in politics.

Although everybody has read "Two Years Before the Mast," the author, Richard H. Dana, Jr., never became a familiar figure to the great mass of his fellow-citizens, and the volume now published by his son, Richard H. Dana, (3d.) with his name as title and "Speeches in Stirring Times and Letters to a Son," as sub-title will throw light on a figure belonging to a small but admirable class of men to whom Americans of Colonial descent are justly proud. The speeches selected for the book touch upon matters still interesting, and the letters may very well serve to correct some of the errors as to the relations of the American father and son in earlier days. It will be remembered that the editor of this book married Longfellow's daughter.

Two new Beacon Biographies are to come this Autumn from the press of Messrs. Small, Maynard & Co.: "George Washington," by Mr. Worthington C. Ford, and "Benjamin Franklin," by Mr. Lindsay Swift, who, without descending to levity, calls the attention of his readers to the humorous side of Poor Richard's character.

"The Letters of Jennie Allen," is undergoing transformation into a play, a process of some difficulty one may suppose. It is easier to see that Miss Florence Tinsley Cox might have won sincere applause by her readings from her "The Chronicles of Rhoda," but one does not think of Jennie and her family as possessed of any attractions except those of genuine good-heartedness, and those too often pale when seen across the footlights.

Messrs. Dana Estes & Co. announce three Chatterbox books for this year. First of all comes "Chatterbox for 1910," with its eight colored plates and cover and 250 pictures illustrating its stories. Next follows "The Chatterbox Book of Soldiers and Sailors" and "The Chatterbox Book of Horses." These volumes, like the four previously issued, are composed of carefully edited original matter, and each is illustrated by 100 pictures after the best modern painters.

This house will also bring out three new adventure books for boys: "The Giant of the Treasure Caves," by Mrs. E. G. Mulliken, which is to be illustrated with colored half tones; "A Scout Story," by Owen Rhoscomyl, a story of fighting and treasure hunting in Patagonia, and "The White River Raft," by Mr. Lewis B. Miller, with pictures by Mr. J. W. F. Kennedy.

Mr. Richard G. Badger has two more novels preparing for publication next month. The first, "The Trail of a Sourdough," is by Mrs. May Kellogg Sullivan, author of "The Woman who Went to Alaska," now in its ninth thousand. Mrs. Sullivan has during the last ten years made seven journeys through Alaska, and knows the country well. Since the publication of Mr. Robert W. Service's "The Songs of a Sourdough" and its sale of 100,000 copies, the title ought not to need explanation, but possibly it may be necessary to say that a "sourdough" is an Alaskan miner who, having spent a year in the country, has learned to practice the Oriental fashion of saving a bit of dough from each baking, and using it to initiate fermentation in the next, letting the "little leaven leaven the whole lump." The other book, "Not of Her Race," by Miss Nancy K. Foster, has already been published in Los Angeles, where a large edition was sold. Its time is the transition period between the Mexican and the American occupation, and the hero is of Mexican descent.

PHILADELPHIA BOOK NEWS

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 26.—The Lippincotts do not begin their regular Fall publication season until about Sept. 6, but in the meantime there is no cessation in their activity in the issue of medical and other technical and professional works. This week, for example, they brought out "Lippincott's New Medical Dictionary," an elaborate work, under the editorship of Dr. Henry W. Cattell; the "Globe English-French Pocket Dictionary," an original compilation in convenient form, the work of Arthur F. Wood, a British barrister, and a treatise on Electro-Metallurgy, by Walter G. McMillan.

Preparations for the Fall issue of fiction are well in hand. Burton E. Stevenson, who has been in Europe all Summer, is now on the way home, and is expected to be in Philadelphia in the middle of September, when his new story, "The Path of Honor," is expected to be ready for publication. Will Levington Comfort, whose "Routledge Rides Alone" has passed into the fourth edition, is also expected here very soon; and George L. Knapp, whose mystery story based upon the third degree, "The Scales of Justice," will be issued in mid-September, has already returned from abroad, where he has been studying the child labor question in France and Germany, and has gone to his home in Denver. In addition to these books the Fall fiction list of the J. B. Lippincott Company will include "The Impostor," by John Reed Scott; "The Lady of the Spur," by David Potter; "The End of the Rainbow," by Stella M. During, and "A Dixie Rose," by Augusta Kortrecht.

For juvenile readers the Lippincotts will have an attractive assortment. Among them will be a new story by John Kendrick Bangs, "Mollie and the Unwiseman Abroad," a special illustrated edition of Jean Ingelow's "Mopsa, the Fairy," Ouida's "Bimbi Stories for Children," and a new edition of "The Swiss Family Robinson."

An unusually handsome edition of the Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam is to be brought out in a few days by David McKay, the distinctive features of which will be the illuminated illustrations by Sangorski and G. Sutcliffe, and the introduction by A. T. Benson of Magdalen College, Cambridge.

QUERIES AND ANSWERS FROM READERS

Origin of the Saying "When at Rome Do as the Romans Do"—"The Way of the World," by Ella Wheeler Wilcox—Annie Vivanti, the Italian Poetess—Authorship of "Beautiful Snow"

COMMUNICATIONS intended for this column should be written on one side of the paper only. They must contain the name and address of the writer, though, if preferred by the inquirer, initials only will be printed. While the endeavor will be made to answer all queries of interest in the order in which they are received, this cannot always be accomplished.

SALLY E. LEVINSON—Will you kindly inform me about the following phrase, that is, its origin: "While in Rome, I am as the Romans."

Miguel de Cervantes (1547-1616) in his "Don Quixote," (Lockhart's translation,) Part II., Chapter 54, says: "When thou art at Rome, do as they do at Rome." Robert Burton (1576-1640) in his "Anatomy of Melancholy," Part III., Memb. 2, Subsect. 1, says: "When they are at Rome, they do there as they see done." St. Augustine, it is said, was in the habit of dining upon Saturday, as upon Sunday, but, being puzzled with the different practices then prevailing, (for they had begun to fast in Rome on Saturday,) consulted St. Ambrose of Milan on the subject. It so happened that at Milan they did not fast on Saturday, and St. Ambrose's answer was: "Quando hic sum, non jejuno Sabbato; quando Romae sum, jejuno Sabbato," (when I am here, I do not fast on Saturday; when at Rome, I do fast on Saturday.) The saying in the Spanish "Don Quixote" is "Cuando à Roma fueres, haz como vieres," (When you are at Rome do as you see.) St. Ambrose writes: "Si fueris Romae, Romano vivito more; si fueris alibi, vivito sicut ibi." (If you are at Rome, live in the Roman style; if you are elsewhere, live as they live elsewhere.) Other versions of the saying are as follows: "When at Rome do as Rome does," (or as the Romans do.) "Ye may not sit in Rome and strive with the Pope," (Scottish proverb from Ray's Collection.) "A Rome comme à Rome," (French.)

E. J. W.—Can you give me the words of the poem:

"Laugh, and the world laughs with you,
Weep and you weep alone."

Also the name of the author.

This poem is entitled "The Way of the World," and the author is Ella Wheeler Wilcox. It is as follows:

Laugh, and the world laughs with you;
Weep, and you weep alone,
For the sad old earth must borrow its mirth,
But has trouble enough of its own.

Sing, and the hills will answer;
Sigh, it is lost on the air;
The echoes bound to a joyful sound,
But shrink from voicing care.

Rejoice, and men will seek you;
Grieve, and they turn and go.
They want full measure of all your pleasure,
But they do not need your woe.

Be glad, and your friends are many;
Be sad, and you lose them all—
There are none to decline your nectared wine,
But alone you must drink life's gall.

Feast, and your halls are crowded;
Fast, and the world goes by.
Succeed and give, and it helps you live,
But no man can help you die.

There is room in the halls of pleasure
For a large and lordly train,
But one by one we must all file on
Through the narrow aisles of pain.

The saying is not original with her. Thomas Moore in his poem, "Oh, Thou Who Dryest the Mourner's Tear," says:

The friends, who in our sunshine live,
When Winter comes, are flown;
And he who has but tears to give,
Must weep those tears alone.

C. M. H.—In your issue of July 23 there is a review of "The Devourers," by Anne Vivanti Chartres. Is she the Italian poetess, Annie Vivanti, whose daughter is the "wonder-child" violinist, Vivian Chartres? I supposed that "Vivian Chartres" was a stage name. I don't know why, as I was aware that Annie Vivanti was married, but I did not know her married name.

Annie Vivanti, the Italian poetess, married John Chartres. She writes in three languages, Italian, French, and English. Her daughter Vivien is the child violinist. Annie Vivanti is the author of "Lirica," (with preface by Giosue Carducci); "Marion"; "The Hunt for Happiness"; "La Rosa Azzurra," an Italian problem play; "That Man," a comedy of manners, produced by A. M. Palmer in New York, and translated into German for the Austrian stage, and "Le Mari," a play, written in French and produced in a Czech version in Prague in 1905.

J. S. M.—I notice in THE REVIEW an article on "Beautiful Snow." An old recitation book which I have containing it gives the name of the author as Major W. A. H. Sigourney. Does any one know who did write "Beautiful Snow"?

In a recent issue The Montgomery (Ala.) Advertiser says it is well known there that J. W. Watson wrote the poem. Relatives of his reside in the town, and a sister, Miss Frankie Watson, taught school there for a number of years and then came to New York. "She valued her Montgomery friendships, and many of the citizens of Montgomery, on their visits to New York, were guests in her cultured home. There they met her brother. The poem ('Beautiful Snow') was under discussion several times by visitors and its acknowledged author." The poem is attributed to Watson in "The World's Best Poetry," published by John D. Morris & Co. of Philadelphia.

STELLA K. KENNY.—Will you please tell me something of Michael Fairless, the author of the charming "The Roadmender," also "The Grey Brethren," and "The Gathering of Brother Hilarius."

We have not found a sketch of "Michael Fairless." One of our readers may be able to give the desired information. E. P. Dutton & Co. published some of the "Fairless" works. "Michael Fairless" is a pseudonym. Presumably the author is English, as these works were published by Duckworth & Co., Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, W. C., London.

PATRICK HENRY AYLETT.—Can you kindly inform me where I can procure a copy of Mr. Roosevelt's Romanes Lecture, delivered at Oxford last June? I will be grateful if you can give me this information.

It was published about two months ago by the Oxford University Press, American Branch, 29 W. 32d St.; in cloth 60 cents, in paper 35 cents.

J. E. BOWDEN.—Please let me know if Paul Du Chaillu, author of "Ivar the Viking," "Stories of the Gorilla Country," "Viking Age.," etc., is alive.

Paul Belloni Du Chaillu died in 1903.

LOUISE MYERS.—Kindly give me the words of the poem, beginning

Do you know you have asked for the costliest thing
Ever made by the hand above—
A woman's heart and a woman's life and a woman's wonderful love?

We published this poem on Sept. 25, 1909. At that time the authorship was accredited by our correspondents to Mary J. Lathrop, Elizabeth B. Browning, and Phoebe Cary.

A. WAKEMAN.—Will you kindly give the name of a good history of Haiti, in English, prior to and of the revolution of 1804?

Consult Pritchard's "Where Black Rules White," St. John's "Haiti," Klein's "San Domingo," or Hazard's "Santo Domingo, Past and Present."

F. J. W.—I have a book entitled "Histoire Naturelle Ornithologie," by Benard. The book contains 230 plates of birds, without text, and is in excellent condition. Please inform me of its value.

It is worth not more than $10. The description is indefinite, as the place and date of publication are not given by our correspondent.

C. D. BUCKNELL.—Will you kindly tell me if there is any value attached to the following books: "American Scenery," two volumes; "Canadian Scenery," two volumes"; illustrated by W. H. Bartlett, literary department by N. P. Willis; published by George Virtue, London, 1842. "Robertson's America," four volumes, eleventh edition, calf, 1808; published by Strahan & Preston, London.

The two works by N. P. Willis are worth from $3 to $5 each. The eleventh edition of Robertson's "America" has no special value.

S. V. D. S.—Can you tell me where the quotation "Righteous Indignation" is found? Also the value of a book, the title of which is "Corporis Juris Civilis" and containing on the title page the following: Amstelodami Apud Joannem Blaeu & Lud & Dan Elziviras Lugduni Batavorum Apud Franciscum Mackrum 1663?

We do not find the phrase, "Righteous Indignation," in any of the works we have consulted. It apparently is not in the Bible. One of our readers may be able to answer the query. The Code of Civil Law is worth about $3.

G. B. HASKELL.—Will you kindly inform me whether a copy of "The Sparrowgrass Papers, or Living In The Country," by Frederic S. Cozzens, New York, Derby & Jackson, No. 119 Nassau St., Cincinnati:—H. W. Derby, 1856, has any special value other than as an old book? I presume it is the first edition as the preface is dated March 1st, 1856.

It is the first edition. A copy, in the J. C. Chamberlain sale, brought 75 cents.

S. G. M.—Will you kindly let me know if there is any value attached to a New York Herald extra of April 15, 1865, containing the assassination of Lincoln? Also is any value attached to a newspaper called The Atlas, bound in book form, and published in 1827, which contains the inauguration of Andrew Jackson?

A copy of The Herald of the date given brings at auction from 25 cents to $1.50. Our correspondent does not state where The Atlas was published nor whether it is a complete set of the year 1827.

W. H. DOUGLAS.—What is the value of Raleigh's "History of the World." No printed date is in the book, except that on the cofer it says Feb. 28, 1769.

There are numerous editions of Sir Walter Raleigh's "History of the World." The first edition appeared in 1614, the eleventh in 1736. The 1769 edition does not seem to be of special value.

W. J. D.—What is the value of a set of the Messages and Papers of the Presidents," in ven volumes, half leather, sold by The ashington Post?

Its value is only nominal.

C. RUEFF.—In your issue of Aug. 13 you give an account of J. C. Oakenfull's "Brazil in 1910." Please let me know where this book can be found.

This is the second edition of Mr. Oakenfull's work, and 5,000 copies of it were published by the author at 21 Clifford Terrace, St. Budeaux, Devenport, England. It was printed by R. White Stevens, 15 Parade, Plymouth, England. It is an 8vo of 280 pages, and illustrated. It is edited by the Commission of Economic Expanse of Brazil, 28 Boulevard des Italiens, Paris; Director Dr. L. R. Viera Souto. The first edition, "Brazil in 1909," is exhausted. We presume that the Brazilian Consul in this city can inform our correspondent where he can procure a copy here of the 1910 issue. We have received a similar query from Frederick A. Camp of Avon-by-the-Sea, N. J.

Answers From Readers

W. F. THOMAS.—In answer to "Inquirer" in your issue of July 9, would say that the lines referred to are to be found in the "Progress of Love," by Alfred Noyes. The poem can be found in the Blackwood edition of Alfred Noyes's poems. If "Inquirer" cannot find a copy of the book, the writer will be glad to send him a copy of the poem, or he may secure the Blackwood edition from the Copp-Clark Company, Limited, Toronto, Canada, price $2.50.

STEVEN T. BYINGTON.—In answering "I. G. E." July 6, you say that "An Austrian Army, awfully arrayed," is in Walsh's Handy Book of Literary Curiosities. Whether the smaller libraries generally have this book I do not know, but I think the most widely accessible source for the jingle is Chambers's Encyclopdia, under "Alliteration." But the mischief is that there are two forms of the poem. For instance, Chambers has:

"Gaunt gunners grapple, giving gashes good;
Heaves high his head heroic hardihood."

where my memory has

"Generals 'gainst Generals grapple grimly great;
How hold heroic hearts hard, haggard hate!"

and other discrepancies, some equally sweeping, others of a word or two. Besides, there is internal evidence that the form in Chambers's cannot possibly be the orginal one, for it makes I., J., K., a triplet rhyme, and likewise, T., U., V., showing obviously that it is altered from a version in which I and J counted as one letter of the alphabet and U and V as another. I think the copy in the latest edition of Bartlett's Familiar Quotations is substantially like Chambers's, with the addition of an "&c." line, which is no improvement.

R. T. P.—The lines

What matter I or they,
Mine or another's day?

about which "F. J. A. G." inquires in your issue of July 16 were written by John Greenleaf Whittier and may be found in his poem, "My Triumph." (Page 406 of the Cambridge edition of Whittier's complete poetical works.)

P. M. M. LINK.—The lines for which "E. J. W." inquired are as follows:

WHAT ARE WOMAN'S RIGHTS.

The right to wake when others sleep:
The right to watch, the right to weep;
The right to comfort in distress,
The right to soothe, the right to bless:
The right the widow's heart to cheer,
The right to dry an orphan's tear;
The right to feed and clothe the poor,
The right to teach them to endure;
The right when other friends have flown,
And left the sufferer all alone—
To kneel that dying couch beside,
And meekly point to Him who died;
The right a happy home to make,
In any clime for Jesus' sake;
Rights such as these are all we crave,
Until our last—a quiet grave.

The author is unknown.

E. T. R.—In your issue of July 2 "H. C. C." asks for a poem called "Misery's Pear Tree." The poem or story was published in Scribner's for May, 1879.

ALFRED O. BLAISDELL.—The words asked for by Theodore A. Bellows in your issue of June 25 are a refrain used, I think, with several of the earlier evangelistic hymns. From an old singing book, "Jubilee Harp," I copy this verse:

Lo! what a glorious sight appears,
To our believing eyes;
The earth and seas are passed away,
And the old rolling skies.

REFRAIN.

O, that will be joyful, joyful, joyful;
O, that will be joyful,
When we meet to part no more,
When we meet to part no more,
On Canaan's happy shore.
'Tis there we'll meet at Jesus' feet,
When we meet to part no more.

Again, in the little hymn book used in Dr. Talmage's Tabernacle, the same refrain is used with the hymn of which the first verse is:

How pleasant thus to dwell below,
In fellowship of love;
And though we part, 'tis bliss to know
The good shall meet above.
O, that will be joyful, &c.

No doubt it may be found appended to many other hymns referring to the future life.

MARGUERITE STUART.—In reply to the request of Richard Hanson, in your issue of July 18, for the full poem, "Only a Dream," by Frank A. Lee, I enclose copy, as follows:

I fell asleep in the rose garden
That looked out upon the sunlit sea;
The perfume from the luscious flowers
Brought sweet dreamland unto me.
And I saw my ship, with sails all set,
Swift sailing toward my bower,
Laden with blessings, joy, and peace,
And earthly fame and power.
But the chilly blast of an arctic breeze
Awoke me from my sleep,
And I looked in vain for the roses sweet,
They lay at my feet in a crumpled heap.
And I looked out over the ocean,
Now raging and storm-tossed and mad,
And I strained my eyes for the snow-white sail
That in my dream had made me glad,
Faded the roses, vanished the sail,
That brought such promise to me,
And in their place the howling gale
And the moan of the raging sea.

J. F. D.—The poem asked for by "M. D. W." in your issue of July 9 may be by Arthur Law, music by Edith Cooke. It is called "Two Marionettes."

Two Marionettes, the story goes,
Once travell'd from town to town,
She was a Princess, fine and fair,
And he was a humble clown:
But he lov'd her true,
As a clown will do,
And ventured at length to speak;
But though it pleas'd her vanity
She felt it was insanity,
And tried to hide the blushes on her little wooden cheek.
He told her his love as, side by side,
They lay in the showman's box;
She scornfully turned away her head,
And shook out her hempen locks.
"He I wed," said she,
"Must a noble be;
A clown I am far above;
'Twould sadly shock propriety,
And deeply grieve society,
And so I'm very sorry, but I can't return your love."
The Showman, one day, redressed his troop,
And somehow it came to pass,
The clown was array'd as a noble Earl,
And she as a serving lass.
Then she look'd askance,
With a tender glance,
And said, "I am thine, sweetheart."
He answered with civility,
"I'm one of the nobility,
And common sense will tell you that we'd better kiss and part."

I. H. L.—Perhaps the following is the poem entitled "A Wish," a correspondent inquired for in your issue of June 11:

A CHILD'S WISH.

"I long to lie, dear mother,
On the cool and fragrant grass,
With the calm, blue sky above my head,
And the shadowy clouds that pass.
I want the bright, bright sun to shine
All 'round about my bed;
I'll close my eyes and God will think
Your little boy is dead."

"And then He'll send an angel
To take me up to Him.
He'll bear me kindly in his arms
Up through the ether dim,
And he'll gently, gently lay me
Close by my Saviour's side,
And, when I'm sure that I'm in heaven,
My eyes I'll open wide."

"And I'll look among the angels,
That stand around the throne,
Till I find my sister Mary,
For I'm sure she must be one.
And when I find her, mother,
We'll go away alone.
I will tell her how we've mourned for her,
All the while that she's been gone."

"O, I should be delighted
To hear her speak again,
Tho' I know she'll not return to us,
To ask her would be vain.
So I'll put my arms around her,
And look into her eyes,
And remember all I say to her,
And all her sweet replies."

"And then I'll ask an angel
To bring me back to you.
He'll bear me, slow and steadily,
Down thro' the ether blue.
And you'll only think, dear mother,
That I've been out to play,
And gone to sleep beneath the shade
This sultry, Summer's day."

EMMA SAUSE.—Can give "J. H. B." the poem "Auf Wiedersehen" from a calendar, but it does not say who the author is.

So near, so near, thine inmost thought I understand;
So far, so far away, I cannot touch thy hand.
So near, so near, I share thy triumphs, hopes, and fears;
So far, I stand alone and face the sunless years.
So near, our souls commune as though no longer twain;
So far, our yearning arms reach forth in vain, in vain.
So near and yet so far! God grant, in yonder land,
Life's dawn may find us heart to heart and hand to hand.

W. H. VAIL.—In reply to H. W. Noble's query, I enclose copy of "The Cross by the Wayside," by Miss Julia Larned, Chicago:

Not on some lone and lofty hill apart
Did Christ the Saviour render up His heart
For man upon the cross of love and woe;
But by the common road where to and fro
The passers went upon their daily ways,
And, pausing, pierced Him with indifferent gaze.
And still the crosses by life's highways rise
Beneath the blinding glare of the noonday skies;
Still with the wrestling spirit's anguished cry
Blends the light mockery of the passerby;
While scorners, gathered at the martyr's feet,
With railing tongues the olden taunts repeat.
We may not go apart to give our life
For men in some supernal, mystic strife,
Beside the common paths of earth doth love
Look from its cross to the still heavens above.

Mrs. MELUSINA FAY PEIRCE, 1,014 North State Street, "D.," Chicago, Ill.—If Mr. Everett P. Wheeler and also "H. F. L." will send me their addresses I will mail to the former a copy of the Rev. Dr. G. H. Hopkins's "Carols, Hymns and Songs," and to the latter one of my little books, "Co-operative Housekeeping: How Not to Do It and How to Do It." Both books have been many years out of print.

K. H.—In "Queries and Answers" for July 30 I find the question, asking if there is a good biography in either English or French of Agnes Sorel, mistress of Charles VII. During the past Winter I studied a great deal about Charles VII. and Agnes Sorel and the times in which they lived. If "A. F. S." would like any information as to the sources I studied from I would be delighted to give any information I can.

Appeals to Readers.

E. N.—Can any of your readers inform me who wrote the subjoined lines—the Welsh National March, entitled

THE MEN OF HARLECH.

See! the bonfire light before ye,
How its fiery tongues do call ye!
Come, as one, to death or glory
Heroes of the fight.

By the mighty voice of Princes,
By the foeman's roar that rises!
By the warrior's clattering horses,
Heroes come in might.

Lest by fire they kill and plunder,
Harlech! Harlech! make them wonder
At thy power that none can sunder,
Freedom thou wilt give.

See how Cambria's warriors gather,
Come from vale or mountain heather,
Like to flood come son and father,
Foeman must not live.

JOHN LINCOLN.—Can any reader give me the author and the value of a pamphlet of sixteen pages entitled "Poems Upon Several Occasions, viz.: 1. A poem on the enemy's first coming to Boston, the burning of Charlestown, the fight at Bunker Hill. 2. The Widow's Lamentation. 3. Nebuchadnezzar's Dream. 4. Against Oppression. 5. An heroic poem on the taking of Gen. Burgoyne, &c. Shall every sense of virtue sleep and every talent lye Buried in the earth, when Subjects of such importance call for them to be improved? Boston. Printed for the Author, 1779."

ELIZABETH P.—I would like to ask if any one can help me to find a poem called "The Tryst," written by, if I am not mistaken, Louise Chandler Moulton. It begins:

I'll keep the tryst through all the years,
That I have kept so long,
Though life is dark and full of fears,
And I've no heart for song.

The only other lines I remember are as follows:

I sometimes think that you would speak
If still you held me dear,
But space is vast and I am weak—
Perchance I do not hear.

LOUISE MYERS.—Can any of your readers give me the short parody on Longfellow's "Hiawatha," containing the following:

So a pair of gloves he made him,
From a dog's skin made he them,
With the inside skinside outside,
And the outside fur side inside.

L. B. A.—I wish to learn some facts about F. W. Bain, who has written several books, notably "A Digit of the Moon" and "A Draught from the Blue." Are these works fiction, or translations, as Bain claims?

Fifty Volumes Added to Everyman's Library—Books of Importance in Science, Biography, and Fiction

Additions to Everyman's Library

IN EARLY October the Duttons plan to bring out fifty new volumes in Everyman's Library, an addition which will bring that series up to a total of 500 published volumes. The new list covers the various departments of the library, and, as provisionally determined at this time, will include the following:

In biography there will be four titles: Scott's "Lives of the Novelists," with introduction by Prof. Saintsbury; Sir Arthur Helps's "Life of Columbus," with introduction by E. A. Helps; "The Life of William Shakespeare," an original biography, with critical account of all the plays, by Oliphant Smeaton, and "The Life of Warren Hastings," by Capt. L. Trotter. In the classics there will be Lord Derby's translation of "The Iliad," with introduction by Miss F. M. Stawell, who will also introduce Cowper's translation of "The Odyssey"; Thucydides' "Peloponessian War," Crawley's translation, and two volumes of Plato, with introduction by A. D. Lindsay, containing a number of the Dialogues, translated by different people, and Xenophon's "Memorabilia," etc. In essays and belles-lettres there will be Matthew Arnold's "Studies of Celtic Literature and Other Critical Essays," with supplement by Lord Strangford, etc.; Hazlitt's "Spirit of the Age and Lectures on English Poets," with introduction by A. R. Waller, M. A.; Burke's "Reflections on the French Revolution and Contingent Essays," introduction by A. J. Grieve; "Utopia" and "The Dialogue of Comfort Against Tribulations," by Sir Thomas More, introduction by Judge O'Hagan.

In fiction there will be: Charles Kingsley's "Alton Locke;" Balzac's "Cousin Pons," with introduction by Prof. Saintsbury; Wilkie Collins' "The Woman in White;" Thackeray's "Newcomes," in two volumes, with introduction by Walter Jerrold; Fielding's "Joseph Andrews," with introduction by Prof. Saintsbury; George Eliot's "Scenes of Clerical Life," and a new translation of a volume of Tolstoy's "Tales and Parables." For young people there will be: Charlotte Yonge's "The Little Duke," with illustrations by Dora Curtis, and a special historical introduction by Eugene Mason; Edgar's "Heroes of England," containing short lives of Drake, Raleigh, Sidney, Nelson, etc.; Thomas Bulfinch's "The Age of Fable," and "Mother Goose's Nursery Rhymes, Songs and Riddles," illustrated, based upon Halliwell Phillipps' "Nursery Rhymes."

In history three volumes complete the six-volume set of Gibbon's "Roman Empire;" Froude's "Mary Tudor," with introduction by Llewelyn Williams; Washington Irving's "Conquest of Granada," Bede's "Ecclesiastical History," etc., introduction by Prof. Santayana, and "The Pilgrim Fathers," a set of contemporary tracts and narratives of the sailing of the Mayflower and the founding of New England, collected and arranged by John Masefield. In philosophy and theology Spinoza's "Ethics," etc., translated by Andrew J. Boyle, M. A., introduction by Prof. Stantayana; John Stuart Mill's "Utilitarianism," "Liberty," "Representative Government," introduction by A. D. Lindsay; Bishop Berkeley's "Principles of Human Knowledge," "New Theory of Vision," and "Three Dialogues of Hylas and Thilonous," introduction by A D. Lindsay; a recast by Principal Burrell of the earliest English translation of à Kempis' "Imitation of Christ," "The Little Flowers," "The Mirror of Perfection," and "The Life of St. Francis," introduction by Thomas Okey.

In poetry and the drama: Byron's complete "Poetical and Dramatic Works," in three volumes, introduction by Prof. Trent; Ben Jonson's "Plays," in two volumes, introduction by Prof. Schelling; "Minor Elizabethan Drama," in two volumes, selected, with introduction by Prof. Thorndike, containing many of the early English tragedies and comedies; "Select Plays of Beaumont and Fletcher," introductions by Prof. Baker, and a volume of Ibsen's "Plays," edited by R. Farquharson Sharp. "Aucassin and Nicolette," with other mediaeval tales, selected and newly translated by Eugene Mason, will appear under romance. Two books of reference are Sir William Smith's "Smaller Classical Dictionary," revised and edited by E. H. Blakeney, M. A., with many additions and corrections, and the first of a series of four modern atlases, this volume being devoted to Europe, and containing ninety-six pages of colored and about thirty-two pages of black and white maps. In science, there will be Huxley's "Select Lectures and Lay Sermons," introduction by Sir Oliver Lodge. In travel and topography, Lord Dufferin's "Letters from High Altitudes," and Sir Richard Burton's "First Footsteps in East Africa," with an introduction by H. W. Nevinson.

Life of Florence Nightingale

A seventh large edition of Sarah A. Tooley's "Life of Florence Nightingale" is announced by The Macmillan Co. It is said that when Miss Tooley was engaged in the writing of this book she spent considerable time in the vicinity of Miss Nightingale's home, mingling with people who had known her and been helped by her, and thus getting together numerous personal anecdotes, incidents, etc.

The same house has just published, in the series of "Pocket American and English Classics," a new edition of à Kempis' "The Imitation of Christ," with an introduction and notes by Brother Leo F. S. C., Professor of English Literature in St. Mary's College, Oakland, Cal. In the "Handbooks of Archaeology and Antiquities," edited by Prof. Percy Gardner, of the University of Oxford, and Francis W. Kelsey, of the University of Michigan, there has been issued "Greek Athletic Sports and Festivals," by E. Norman Gardner, a volume in which, aside from the archaeological features, many of the problems confronting us to-day in the matter of physical training and education are dealt with. The book is profusely illustrated. A new and revised edition of Heinrich Ries' "Economic Geology" has also just been published. This book is intended especially for mining engineers and geologists. The first edition appeared four years ago and since that time the author, who is Professor of Economic Geology at Cornell University, has been busied in research work the results of which are embodied in the present volume.

Novels by Three Women

Three novels by as many women are promised for early Fall publication by the Putnams, notices of which have, from time to time, appeared in these columns. There is Miss Alice MacGowan's novel of the civil war, in which special attention is paid to the battles and siege of Chattanooga, entitled, "The Sword in the Mountains." "The Master of the Vineyard," by Myrtle Reed, a novel in which this writer takes up the subject of divorce. "The Mistress of Shenstone," by Florence L. Barclay.

A volume of reminiscences by the late Princess Caroline Murat will be published early in the Fall by this house. The Princess was a granddaughter of King Joachim of Naples, and the intimate friend of the Empress Eugenie. She was born at Bordentown, N. J., and spent the formative years of her life in this country. Her book of memoirs will present a picture of the Second Empire and of the exile of the French royal family. There will also be published a second series of "Where Ghosts Walk," by Marion Harland, containing sketches of some of the impressive characters of history, "in settings with which their names are associated." There is to be besides, a new edition of the "The Little Gingerbread Man," by G. H. P., a story of adventure for young people. The volume will be illustrated in color by Robert G. Herbert.

Hypnotism in Daily Life

A new book by Dr. Bernard Hollander, M. D., entitled "Hypnotism and Suggestion," will shortly be published by the Putnams. Dr. Hollander has been engaged in the study of hypnotism for many years, both for purposes of scientific investigation and in order to establish new methods of cure in the treatment of disease. In the pursuit of his investigations he is said to have produced "not only the well known phenomena of hypnotism, but also many extraordinary phenomena, which the representatives of other schools, owing to their difference in methods, have failed to draw forth."

A second printing of James Oppenheim's novel, "Wild Oats," is announced by B. W. Huebsch. The fifth large printing of Sudermann's "The Song of Songs" is also in preparation. The same publisher announces for the Fall a new book by Prof. Zueblin, formerly of the University of Chicago, and author of "The Religion of a Democrat," etc., to be entitled "Democracy and the Overman."

A novel by Katherine Cecil Thurston, author of "The Masquerader," etc., will be published in September by Harper & Brothers. "Max" is the title chosen by Miss Thurston. Two recent novels sent to press this week for another printing are, "Mary Cary," by Kate Langley Bosher, and "The Fruit of Desire," by Virginia Demarest.

The publication date of "Forbidden Ground," by Gilbert Watson, announced in these columns last week, has been deferred to the 9th of next month, owing to numerous advance orders. John Lane Co. are the publishers. This house also publishes in this country A. Neil Lyons's sketch of "Robert Blatchford," reviewed at length in this paper last week and credited to The Clarion Press, London.

This week the John Lane Co. publishes "Hickory Limb," by Parker H. Fillmore, a story of child life that takes for its theme the well-known verses, "Mother, may I go out to swim," etc.

"Edward MacDowell, his Life and Ideals," by Elizabeth Fry Page, was issued recently by Dodge Publishing Company. Besides the biographical and critical material the book contains a description of the musical colony at Peterboro, N. H., and the work being carried on there in furtherance of the composer's ideas and aims. A portrait of Mr. MacDowell is used as a frontispiece to the volume.

"One Braver Thing"

"One Braver Thing," by Richard Dehan, which Duffield & Co. have just published, is an instance of the necessity of changing titles for English and American audiences. In England the book is published as "The Dop Doctor." Dop is South African for the cheapest kind of brandy, the popular drink with the Boers. Dr. Owen Saxham, in the novel, acquired the soubriquet of Dop Doctor through his notorious addiction to dop, or any other form of liquor, and an important portion of Mr. Dehan's long novel is devoted to the man's struggle to free himself from the curse of drink. In the United States, however, "dop" at once suggests "dope," quite another thing, and was therefore considered as apt to be misleading as a part of the title of the book in an American edition. The American title, therefore, applies to a different aspect of Saxham's upward struggle—his refusal to reveal to the woman he loves the baseness of his rival. "One Braver Thing" is quoted from a verse of Donne's.

Cassell & Co. announce that they will publish shortly for the Cobden Club, at a low price, a pamphlet on "The Effect of Protection on the Standard of Life in Germany."

Darwinism, Mendelism

During the Fall Cassell & Co. will publish a book called "Breeding and the Mendelian Discovery," by A. D. Darbishire, Demonstrator of Zoology and Lecturer on Heredity at the Imperial College of Science and Technology, London. Mr. Darbishire is quoted as being one of "the younger men of science who is practically making Mendelism a life study," and his book, the result of his investigations, is declared to be "the first attempt to elaborate this subject in an accurately scientific and yet thoroughly popular form, in a way that will be of value, not only to investigators, but to all people commercially interested in the question of breeding, such as poultry fanciers, sheep breeders, gardening people, farmers," etc.

The Value of Dancing

Next month Doubleday, Page & Co. will publish a book by Luther H. Gulick on "The Healthful Art of Dancing." The author has been identified with the new movement for teaching all sorts of folk dances in the public schools, and makes special reference to the practical conduct of folk dancing in the public schools of New York. In his book he discusses these dances from various standpoints—health, grace, and particularly with regard to their adaptability to American conditions, how they may be carried out in connection with school, social, and playground life. A principal aim of the volume is said to be "to assist in planning and executing an intelligent social festival to replace haphazard and meaningless celebration by individuals."

About the middle of September The H. K. Fly Co. will publish "Madame X," the novelized version of Alexandre Bisson's play of the same name. It is a story of mother-love, the self-denial of a woman who, in order to shield her child, refuses to reveal her identity, and thus becomes Madame X—the unknown. Later on the same house will publish another story, "The Victory of Allan Rutledge," by Alexander Corkey. Mr. Corkey is a new writer, and is also a Presbyterian preacher. This story of his ran serially in one of the religious periodicals. It is said to appeal especially to all readers of Ralph Connor and Harold Bell Wright.

Owen Johnson's book, originally published as "The Eternal Boy," has just been brought out by The Baker & Taylor Co., with the title "The Prodigious Hickey." It contains twenty-two illustrations by Frederick Dorr Steele, May Wilson Preston, and others.

BOOKS

A Successful Wife

By G. Dorset

A narrative of heartbeats—wifehood through a woman's eyes. For the first time in fiction is this done—clearly, cleanly, truthfully. The girl grows into a woman and the woman becomes a wife amid the surroundings we all know. She tells us exactly what her struggle was. And she was first of all a poor little stenographer in New York. It is a thrilling life experience from first to last.

The Fruit of Desire

By Virginia Demarest

This novel is written by a successful author with a wide reputation in a particular field. Because this novel is of a totally different kind, the author has taken an assumed name, that the book may be received wholly on its merits. Both the hero and heroine are normal, likable persons, but they are forced by circumstances to take an unusual view (pure and clean) of love and marriage. Without its reality they are united by a closer, stronger bond than are most married couples. The story runs along in breathless lines to their happy marriage.

The Wild Olive

By the Author of "The Inner Shrine"

The Bookman, whose figures are recognized as the National authority, now declares "The Wild Olive" to be the best selling novel in the United States. The success of "The Wild Olive" is even greater than that of "The Inner Shrine" because the story is greater, better, finer. "The Wild Olive" has a broader basis of plot, a nobler conception of character, a higher idealism. It is—above all else—a remarkably human story.

Going Some

By Rex Beach

It is curious that a writer should have two personalities—two opposite sides—curious and most unusual. Here is Rex Beach, whom we know only as the author of splendid stories of outdoor life. Now he comes before us in a new and surprising role as the writer of one of the funniest stories ever written. It is rollicking, galloping, scintillating, sparkling fun from beginning to end—and withal clean and sweet as a girl's fresh laughter. If you mind a slang, keep away!

MARY CARY, that little book of the heart, continues to be read and loved all over the country. One critic said, "Let's be glad for books like Mary Cary!"
